NOTICE.

The reader is earnestly requested to refer to "THE SUPPLEMENT" before consulting the Work. A few words are all that are required in addition to the original Preface. The learned and accomplished friends whose co-operation I then gratefully acknowledged, have been equally kind and obliging in this re-issue. One, Mr. Stephen Tucker, has since become Somerset Herald, and has been succeeded as Rouge Croix by my son, Mr. H. Farnham Burke, F.S.A., who has rendered me essential service in this edition.

PREFACE.

The General Armory first appeared in the year 1842, and was most favourably received. The long period that has since elapsed has, by the acquisition of vast materials, tended to the completion, and it is hoped to the perfection of the original work. Founded on the Heralds' Visitations, the County Histories, and the heraldic writings of Dugdale, Camden, Guillim, Edmondson, Berry, Nicolas, and others, the present edition of the Armory is, I venture to assert, the most comprehensive Collection of Arms ever brought together, embracing, as it does, some 60,000 coats. The most minute and watchful editing, rendered necessary by the technical nature of the blazons, has been bestowed upon it. Every line required to be closely examined, and each heraldic description to be correctly entered. Despite, however, of this anxious attention, errors will doubtless be detected; but these will, it is confidently expected, meet with the reader's indulgence. The work comprises the Armorial Bearings of the Noblemen and Gentlemen of the British Empire, and the various Coats that are to be seen in churches and family mansions, together with those traceable on Seals, Deeds, Wills, and Monumental remains.

History and genealogy, linked as they are with Heraldry, are illustrated and in some instances explained, by the Science of Arms.

Heraldry arose with feudalism, attained its full growth in mediæval times, and now, in the 19th century, is prized by all who can show honourable ancestry, or wish to found honourable families.

Valuable as the assistance has been which I have derived from the authorities who have written upon the subject, the result of my endeavours would be incomplete were it not for the generous aid afforded me by many distinguished friends.

To George Burnett, Lyon King of Arms, my deepest obligation is due. With energy untiring, with liberality unrestricted, and with kindness unwearied, he has done for this book and for Scotland generally what has never before been attempted. The heraldry of the historic kingdom over which his jurisdiction extends is, thanks to his learning and ability, fully and authoritatively given in this edition of the General Armory. My debt is also great, and my acknowledgments are most cordially offered, to several members of the Heralds' College England. My old and esteemed friend
Sir Albert Woods, Garter, head of that famous Corporation, has responded with unfailing courtesy and consideration to every question I have put to him; and Chester, Lancaster, and York Heralds, Mr. Murray Lane, Mr. Cokayne, and General de Havilland, always so kind and obliging, have supplied most important information. And here I take occasion to express the gratitude I especially feel to another member of the Heralds' College, my accomplished friend Stephen Tucker, Rouge Croix. His skill and great heraldic knowledge have, from the Glossary to the very end of the Armory, amended and adorned the book. There is scarcely a page that does not afford evidence of the value of his co-operation.

Outside of the Lyon Office and the Heralds' College numerous contributors have essentially aided me in the compilation of this volume.

John H. Glascott, J.P., of Killowen, co. Wexford, so well known as a Genealogist and Herald, has, with indefatigable zeal and assiduous care, watched the progress of the work from the very beginning. I have also to return my warmest thanks to many others who have most kindly seconded my endeavours, and particularly to Mr. H. Sydney Grazebrook, Barrister-at-law, Captain Alfred E. Lawson Lowe, of Highfield, Sir John Maclean, F.S.A., Mr. Robert Riddle Stodart, of the Lyon Office, Mr. Alfred W. Morant, F.S.A., Mr. J. Paul Rylands, of Highfields, F.S.A., Mr. Tyssen-Amherst, of Didlington Hall, Mr. Reginald Stewart Boddington, Mr. H. A. Johnston, of the Irish Bar, Rev. E. H. Mainwaring Sladen, M.A., Mr. George D. Tomlinson, Mr. W. Smith Ellis, of Hydecroft, Rev. John Woodward, George W. Marshall, LL.D., F.S.A., Mr. Charles J. O'Donel, of Dublin, Barrister-at-law, Mr. James Greenstreet, Viscount Gort, Mr. E. P. Shirley, of Ettington Park, and Hon. Robert C. Winthrop and Mr. Thomas C. Amory, both of Boston, U.S.

Thus produced and thus largely increased, the Armory will, it is earnestly hoped, become a book of general and satisfactory reference on the subject of Heraldry and Arms, and form the sequel to my series of works in elucidation of the genealogy and history of the titled and untitled orders of the three Kingdoms.

THE GENERAL ARMORY, comprising in alphabetical order, the Armorial Bearings of the Noblemen and Gentlemen of the three Kingdoms, and the various Coats to be seen in Churches and Family Mansions, on Deeds and Wills, &c. 1-1153

SUPPLEMENT TO THE GENERAL ARMORY  1154-1161

MOTTOES in alphabetical order  1162-1185
HERALDRY.

HERALDRY may be defined “the art of blazoning, assigning, and marshalling coat armour,” or more particularly “the art of arranging and explaining in proper terms all that relates or appertains to the bearing of Arms, Crests, Badges, Quarterings, and other hereditary marks of honour.” The marshalling of processions, the conducting of public solemnities, the declaring of peace and war, come also within the province of a herald’s duties.

The origin of badges and emblems may certainly be traced to the earliest times, and the enthusiasm of some of the primitive writers on the subject has led them to gravely assert that even Noah and Japhet had distinctive armorial bearings! But while it may be admitted that in the ancient world warlike nations bore on their shields and standards distinguishing devices, it is not clear that our Heraldry can in strictness be traced to a more remote period than the twelfth or, at furthest, the eleventh century. Numerous tombs exist of persons of noble blood, who died before the year 1000, yet there is not an instance known of one with a heraldic bearing. The Père Menestrier made a minute and extensive search through France, Italy, Germany, and Flanders, and the most ancient Coat of Arms he was able to discover was that upon the monumental effigy of a Count of Wasserburg, in the church of St. Emeran, at Ratisbon: the ensigns were “Per fess ar. and sa. a lion rampant counterchanged;” and the date 1010. Yet even here “there is good reason to believe,” says the learned Frenchman, “that this tomb was restored some time after the Count’s death by the Monks of the Abbey he had endowed.”

Sir John Ferne is of opinion that the science was borrowed from the Egyptians. Sir George Mackenzie ascribes it to the age of Charlemagne, and says that it began and grew with the feudal laws, but took its origin, perhaps, in the time of Jacob, who, blessing his sons, gave them marks of distinction, which the twelve tribes afterwards bore on their ensigns: but our old reliable friend, Guillim, will have it that Heraldry—as a science in England—cannot go back to an earlier epoch than about the year 1200. For my own part, I consider that the registry of its birth may be found among the archives of the Holy Wars, that its cradle was rocked by the soldiers of the Cross, and that its maturity was attained in the chivalrous age of Feudalism.

However, at the trial of the celebrated controversy between Sir Richard Le Scrope and Sir Robert Grosvenor, for the right to bear the arms “Az. a bend or,” held 20th August, 1385, before the High Constable of England and Sir John de Multon, Deputy to the Earl Marshal, and adjourned to 16th May, 1386, John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, deposed that the said arms were of right the arms of Sir Richard Le Scrope, and his ancestors at the time of the Conquest, and that in the French wars, under Edward III., one Carminow of Cornwall, challenged Sir Richard Le Scrope’s right to the same, that the dispute having been referred to six knights, they found that the said Carminow was descended of a lineage armed “Az. a bend or,” since the time of King Arthur, and that the said Sir Richard Le Scrope was descended of a right line of ancestors armed with the same arms since the time of King William the Conqueror. Owen Glendower, the Welsh Prince, deposed at the trial that the Grosvenors bore the same arms from the time of the Conquest.
The word Heraldry is derived from the German Her, a host, an army—and Feld, a champion; and the term blazon, by which the science is denoted in French, English, Italian, and German, has most probably its origin in the German word Blasen, “to blow the horn.” Whenever a new knight appeared at a Tournament, the herald sounded the trumpet, and as the competitors attended with closed visors, it was his duty to explain the bearing of the shield or coat-armour belonging to each. Thus, the knowledge of the various devices and symbols was called Heraldry, and as the announcement was accompanied with sound of trumpet, it was termed “blazoning the arms.” The Germans transmitting the word to the French, it reached us after the Norman Conquest.

At first, armorial bearings were probably like surnames, assumed by each warrior at his free will and pleasure; and, as his object would be to distinguish himself and his followers from others, his cognizance would be respected by the rest, either out of an innate courtesy or a feeling of natural justice disposing men to recognize the right of first occupation, or really from a positive sense of the inconvenience of being identified or confounded with those to whom no common tie united them. Where, however, remoteness of stations kept soldiers aloof, and extensive boundaries, and different classes of enemies from without, subdivided the force of a kingdom into many distinct bands and armies, opportunities of comparing and ascertaining what ensigns had been already appropriated would be lost, and it well might happen, even in the same country, that various families might be found unconsciously using the same arms.

It has long been a matter of doubt when the bearing of coats of arms first became hereditary. The Norman titles engraved in Mr. Henniker’s letter to the Society of Antiquaries, were supposed to have fixed the date at the period of the Norman Conquest, but Mr. Montagu very ably argues that it is not at all clear that these titles were of the same antiquity as the Abbaye aux Hommes at Caen, in which they were found; indeed he seems to prove quite the contrary. Certain it is that it was not until the Crusades that Heraldry came into general use. In the History of Battell Abbey, Richard Lucy, Chief Justice temp. Henry II., is reported to have blamed a mean subject for carrying a private seal, when that pertained, as he said, to the King and Nobility alone. Under Edward I., seals of some sort were so general, that the Statute of Exon ordained the coroner’s jury to certify with their respective signets, and in the following reign they became very common, so that not only such as bore arms need a seal, but others fashioned signets, taking the letters of their own names, flowers, knots, birds, beasts, &c. It was afterwards enacted by statute, that every freethinker should have his proper seal of arms; and he was either to appear at the head court of the shire, or send his attorney with the said seal, and those who omitted this duty were amerced or fined.

The earliest Heraldic document that has been handed down to us is a Roll of Arms, made between the years 1240 and 1245. It contains the names and arms of the Barons and Knights of the reign of Henry III., and affords incontrovertible evidence of the fact that Heraldry was at that time reduced to a science. It is curious, too, as indicating the changes that have taken place between a period approximating so nearly to its origin and the present; and invaluable, as offering contemporary testimony of the exact bearings of the ancestors of some of our most distinguished families. This important manuscript as well as three other similar collections, “The Siege of Carlaverock,” “A Roll of Arms, temp. Edward II.,” and “A Roll of Arms, temp. Edward III.,” were published by the late Sir Harris Nicolas, accompanied by prefatory remarks and occasional notes.

“The Siege of Carlaverock” is a poem descriptive of the Banners of the Peers and Knights of the English army who were present at the siege of Carlaverock Castle in Scotland, in February, 1301.

The Roll of Arms of the time of Edward II., made between the years 1308 and 1314, is divided into counties, and comprises the names and arms of about eleven hundred and sixty persons. It still remains in the Cottonian Library, British Museum (Calig. A. xviii.).

The Fourth Roll, temp. Edward III., appears to have been compiled between the years 1337 and 1350. Its plan was most comprehensive, embracing the arms of all the Peers and Knights in England, arranged in the following order:—

I. The King, the Earls, and the Barons.
II. The Knights under their respective counties.
III. The great Personages who lived in earlier times.

Besides these Rolls, other collections of arms have been published, adding much to our information on the subject. In these ancient rolls Heraldry first assumes the appearance of a science, and it would seem that the rules by which it is governed then existed.

The earliest writer on the subject, whose work has descended to us, is Nicholas Upton. His treatise was composed in the reign of Henry V., and translated in that of his successor, in the work well known to all admirers of the art as "The Boke of St. Albans." With the decline of chivalry the study of Heraldry was neglected, and the exaggerated dignity to which Ferne, Mackenzie, and other enthusiasts endeavoured to raise it, only gained for it contempt; but a taste for the study of antiquities generally has gradually revived; and the use of Heraldry as a key to history and biography is becoming every day more and more acknowledged, not only in England, but throughout Europe.

RIGHT TO BEAR ARMS.

"Ensigns," says a learned writer, "were, in their first acceptation, taken up at any gentleman's pleasure, yet hath that liberty for many ages been deny'd, and they, by regal authority, made the rewards of merit or the gracious favours of princes."

In the reign of Henry V. the following proclamation issued, prohibiting the use of heraldic ensigns to all who could not show an original and valid right, except those "who had borne arms at Agincourt:"

> Quod nullus cujusque status, gradus seu conditionis fuerit, hujusmodi arma sive tunicas armorum in se sumat, nisi ipso jure antecessorio vel ex donatione aliquis ad hos sufficientem potestatem habentis, ea possideat aut possidere debet, et quod ipso arma sive tunicas illas ex cujus dono obtinet, demonstrationis sua personis ad hoc per nos assignatis manifeste demonstret, exceptis illis qui nobiscum apud bellum de Agincourt arma portabant, &c."

But, despite the royal ordinance, a multiplicity of abuses found their way into all matters touching descent and arms, which called aloud for reformation, and gave rise, in the early part of the sixteenth century, to the Herald's Visitations, documents of high authority and value. Royal commissions were issued under the Great Seal to the two Provincial Kings of Arms, Clarenceux and Norroy, authorising and commanding each, by himself or his deputy, to visit the whole of his province as often as he should deem it necessary, to summon before him all those who bore or assumed to bear arms and were styled esquires, to cause them to produce authority for bearing and using same, "to peruse and take knowledge of all manner of coat armour, cognizances, crests, and other like devices, with the notes of the descents, pedigrees, and marriages, of all the nobility and gentry therein; and also to reprove, control and make infamous by proclamation, all such as unlawfully, and without just authority, usurped or took any name or title of honour or dignity." In these documents are set forth the principal hereditary achievements of the kingdom.

All persons who can deduce descent from an ancestor whose armorial ensigns have been acknowledged in any one of the Visitations, are entitled to carry those arms by right of inheritance. When, however, no such descent can be shown, the party must, if it be possible, prove himself to be descended from some one whose right has been admitted; from a Grantee; or, in fault of that proof, must become a Grantee himself.
HERALDRY.

These observations apply more especially to the usage of arms in England.

In England and Wales, Arms are granted, under the authority of the Earl Marshal, by Garter and one of the Provincial Kings, according to his jurisdiction. In Scotland, Lyon King of Arms, and in Ireland, Ulster King of Arms, have the sole power to grant or confirm Arms in their respective Kingdoms. In consequence of the disturbed state of Ireland towards the close of the sixteenth and nearly all through the seventeenth century, the very period when the English Heralds made their Visitations, and admitted arms to all who proved their right, it was impossible to carry out Visitations in Ireland. In fact, there are only three Irish Visitations remaining on record, viz., Dublin County, 1606; Dublin City, 1607; Wexford County, 1618. To provide for this want of Visitation, Ulster King of Arms has authority to give a Confirmation (with some slight heraldic difference to indicate the fact of its being a Confirmation), to a claimant who can prove to his satisfaction that he, the claimant, and his family have used for a certain number of generations the said arms and crest.

BLAZON OF ARMS.

Blazon, or Blazon, is the proper technical description of Armorial Bearings, according to the scientific rules of Heraldry. In blazoning a coat of arms, brevity is to be studied, and tautology avoided, care being still taken to give a minute description of every bearing, its position, place on the shield, tincture, &c. Though the same metal, colour, or fur, may occur more than once, the repetition of its name should be scrupulously guarded against, by describing the charge, which happens to be of a tincture already mentioned, as of the first, second, or third, according to the relative position that tincture may hold in the blazon; for example, the arms of Preston of Furness Abbey are, "Ar. two bars gu. on a canton of the second a cinquefoil or." In this blazon the colour of the canton is-described of the second, to obviate the repetition of the word "gu." The next general rule to be observed is to begin the blazon with the description of the field, its tincture or tinctures, unless it is divided by any of the main partitions already treated, in which case the descriptive blazon would begin as per fess, per pale, per saltire, &c. The principal ordinary, if any, should next be described, with its tincture, &c.; and then the charges around it generally, giving the surcharges upon such ordinary, after those between which it is borne; the chief, canton, or any charge placed in a particular point of the shield, with its surcharges, if any, being generally blazoned last.

If a coat consists of two tinctures only, it is blazoned, as in the arms of LAMBTON, "Sa. a fess between three lambs pass. ar. which indicates that both the fess and lambs are of the tincture argent; when the last-mentioned charge, or bearing, is of the same tincture as that one named immediately before it, and yet cannot be included under one word, it is necessary to describe it as "of the last:" thus, in the arms of DORMER, "Az. ten billets, four, three, two and one, or, on a chief of the last a demi lion ramp, issuant sa." Of the last is used to prevent a repetition of "or."

If there be two sets of charges of equal number on any parts of the shield, or one set of charges on an ordinary between the same number of charges on the shield, the repetition of the number must be avoided, by describing the second set of charges by the words "as many." Thus, in the arms of WILMOT, "Ar. on a fess gu. between three eagles' heads erased sa. as many escallops or: the words "as many" prevent the repetition of the number "three" in this example.

When charges are borne without the interposition of the ordinaries, the exact position they occupy on the shield—fessways, or in fess, if in line across the field; paleways, or in pale, if perpendicular, one over the other; and bendways, or in bend, if placed diagonally from the dexter chief to the sinister base, must be described, as well as the attitude and tinctures of such charges, e.g.
HERALDRY.

"Macleever (Arncliffe, co. York). Sa. three greyhounds courant in pale ar. collared or: " in pale signifying that the greyhounds are borne perpendicularly one above the other.

When charges are three, whether with or without ordinaries, the usual way they are borne is two in chief and one in base, and this is understood without being mentioned; but if they be not so placed, or exceed the number three, their position must be specifically described, according to the preceding rule; or if horizontal rows, of an equal or unequal number, their number, &c., must be stated. The last remark, the arms of Brouncker will tend to elucidate, viz.: "Ar. six pellets in pale, three, two, and one, a chief embattled sa.," implying that the six pellets are borne in three rows, three in the uppermost, two in the second, and one in the lowest.

MARSHALLING ARMS.

Marshalling arms is defined by Guillim and Mackenzie to be "the conjoining of two or more coats in one shield," or, strictly speaking, the proper arrangement in one shield, either by impaling or quartering, of two or more ensigns.

"Impaling" applies to the method of using the wife's arms, and is usually practised by dividing the shield into two equal parts, and placing the husband's arms in the dexter, with the wife's in the sinister. When there happens to be a border round one or both of them, the portion of the border where the two coats unite is omitted. There are, however, two rules to be attended to:—

No husband can impale his wife's arms with his own on a surcoat, ensign, or banner, nor can a Knight of the Garter, or of any other Order, when surrounding the shield with the motto of his knighthood, bear his wife's coat within it; for, saith Sandford, although the husband may give his equal half of her escutcheon, yet he cannot share his temporary order of knighthood with her, except she be Sovereign of the Order. This restriction is not allowed by Edmondson, who argues that there is not a single article in all the Statutes of the Order, that debars the new-made knight from continuing to impale, as he had done previously, his wife's arms. It has always struck me that the churlish regulation of modern heraldry, which precludes a knight from bearing his wife's arms within the ribbon or collar of his order, is an anomaly. The wife of a knight shares the precedence, title, and dignity of her husband. Why then should she be debarred participation in the heraldic bearings, and the beautiful garter that encircles them? This exclusion is not of ancient date. The old Stall Plates of the Knights afford proof of the contrary, and gives several instances of husband's and wife's arms impaled within the Garter. In the monument at Stanton Harcourt there is not only the Garter tied round Lady Harcourt's left arm, but at the head of the tomb appear the bearings of her husband impaling within a Garter the lady's own arms.

If a man marries an heiress or co-heiress, instead of impaling his wife's arms with his own he bears them on an escutcheon of pretence in the centre or fess point of his paternal coat, but he cannot so bear them during the lifetime of his wife's father. When a lady who is an heiress dies leaving her husband surviving, his right to bear her arms on an escutcheon of pretence ceases; the right to bear her arms descends to her issue to be borne as a quartering. A man cannot bear his wife's arms as an impalement after her death: he must bear his arms as before his marriage, otherwise there is no heraldic mode of showing that his wife is dead. The case differs, however, as regards a widow: whilst she remains such, she is obliged to bear the arms of her deceased husband; and I am inclined to think that a widower should continue to impale or otherwise associate his late wife's arms with his own if there was issue of the marriage. A husband whose wife is by descent entitled to a shield of quarterings, may impale all the quarterings his wife is entitled to; but this is not usual.
HERALDRY.

If a commoner marry the widow of a peer he impales only the arms of his wife's father, the lady on a subsequent marriage losing all right to any armorial bearings of her former husband or husbands.

Edward III. appears to have been the first that quartered arms in England, when, in right of his mother Isabella, daughter and heiress of Philip IV. of France, he assumed the arms, Az. semée-de-lis or, as a quartering on the national banner; and John Hastings, second Earl of Pembroke, was the first subject who imitated his royal master's example, quartering, Az. six lioncels ramp. ar., in right of his grandmother, Julian, daughter of Thomas de Leyburn, and heiress of William de Leyburne, summoned to Parliament 1299.

The intention of Quartering is to show the descent of one family from heiresses or co-heiresses of other houses, and to exhibit and perpetuate this representation. Thus, the children of an heiress are entitled, at her death, to quarter with their paternal coat her arms, as well as all quarterings which she may have inherited. It must be borne in mind that an heiress or co-heiress in Heraldry is, by the laws of arms, a lady who is, by having no brother, or by her brother or brothers having died without issue, a representative in blood of her father, and that thereby she transmits to her descendants the right to quarter her family arms. The term "heiress" in Heraldry does not apply to the succession to property: Andrew Lynn, Esq., of Ballinamona, co. Waterford, disinherited his son, and bequeathed his estates to his daughter Ann, the wife of Robert Carew, ancestor of Lord Carew; her descendants inherited the estates so bequeathed, but did not acquire a right to quarter the arms of Lynn. In marshalling quarterings, the first, after the paternal arms, is the shield of the earliest heiress, which the bearer's direct ancestor in the male line has married, and then succeed any quarterings her descent may bring in; with the second heiress the same rule is followed, and so on, in chronological rotation, to the end of the chapter.

When a daughter becomes heiress or co-heiress to her mother (also an heiress), and not to her father, which happens when the father marries a subsequent wife, and has by her male issue, to represent him, she is entitled to bear the maternal coat with the arms of her father on a canton, taking all the quarterings to which her mother was, by descent, entitled. When married, she conveys the whole to be borne on an escutcheon of pretence, and transmits them at her death to be borne as quarterings by her descendants, the paternal canton on the first shield still indicating the nature of the representation.

If an heiress E.B., marry first F.G., and have a son R.G., and marry secondly H.I., and have by her second husband an only child, a daughter, S.I., the son of this lady S.I., viz., T.N., would quarter the arms of that second husband as well as the arms of his grandmother E.B. This point has been thus settled by the Heralds' College in London, but the question requires further consideration and adjudication before it can be finally admitted.

The following sketch will illustrate the point:

An archbishop or a bishop impales the arms of his Sec with his family arms, being, if I may so express it, married to the church, the arms of the See on the dexter side, and his family arms on the sinister, but if he be married, he does not carry his wife’s arms on his shield. On his hatchment he uses two shields, the first on the dexter side, viz., the arms of his See impaled with his own arms, surmounted with a mitre, the second on the dexter, his own arms impaled with his wife’s, in the same way as knights of the different Orders.

If a man marry a widow, he impales her maiden arms. A widower entering on a second marriage, marshals with his own the arms only of his second wife. He is not, according to the laws of arms, entitled to continue the usage of his deceased wife’s ensigns.

THE SHIELD OF ARMS.

According to the received authorities, there are ten classes of arms:—

1. Arms of Dominion, those borne by Soverigns and annexed to the territories they govern.
2. Arms of Pretension, used by Soverigns who are not in possession of the dominions to which such arms belong, but who claim, or pretend a right to them. Thus the Kings of England from Edward III. to George III. quartered the arms of France.
3. Arms of Community, those of bishoprics, universities, cities, and other corporate bodies.
4. Arms of Assumption, adopted without the grant of the Sovereign or of a King-of-Arms, and used as a proper right. For instance, if a prince or nobleman be taken prisoner in lawful war, the victor may bear the arms of the person so taken, and transmit them to his heirs.
5. Arms of Alliance: these are adopted by families or private persons, and are joined with their own heraldic bearings to denote the alliance which they have contracted by marriage. Arms of this description are impaled, or are borne in an escutcheon of pretence by those who have married heiresses. But the latter arrangement (that of the separate escutcheon) is not allowed until the death of the father of the lady.
6. Arms of Adoption are borne by a stranger in blood, and are specially granted by the Sovereign to empower the person applying for them to obtain certain moneys or estates bequeathed on the condition of his assuming the name and arms of the testator.
7. Arms of Concession or Honourable Augmentation are peculiar marks of honour granted by the Sovereign for some act deserving of royal approbation.
8. Arms Paternal and Hereditary are those transmitted from the first possessor to his heirs; the son being a gentleman of second coat armour; the grandson a gentleman of blood; and the great-grandson a gentleman of ancestry.

The Shield admits of various forms, and is divided into nine integral parts to mark the position of the several charges, but I shall only here allude to the relative positions of the principal parts.

First, it is to be observed, that the side of the escutcheon opposite the left hand of the person looking at it, is the dexter, or right side, and that opposite to the right hand, the sinister, or left. The centre of the shield is called the fess point; the top of the dexter side, the dexter chief; the top of the sinister side, the sinister chief. The bottom of the shield is called the base, and its respective sides are called the dexter and sinister base.

The Colours common to shields and their bearings are called tinctures, and are of seven different kinds; two metals and five colours, viz., or, gold; argent, silver; azure, blue; gules, red; vert, green; purpure, purple; and sable, black. Some writers on the science admit two additional, tawney, or toulée, orange; and sanguine, blood colour; but they are rarely to be met with in British Arms.

When natural objects are introduced into Heraldry, they are often represented in their ordinary colours, and this is expressed by the term proper.

A shield is said to be quartered when it is divided into four equal parts by horizontal and perpendicular lines crossing the centre; that at the top of the dexter side is called the first quarter; the top of the sinister side is called the second quarter; the third quarter is at the bottom of the dexter side, and the bottom of the sinister side is the fourth quarter. When the shield is divided into two equal parts by a perpendicular line, it is called paling; the dexter being the man's side, the sinister the woman's. Dividing the shield into two equal parts by a horizontal line is called per fess.

Charges are the various figures depicted on shields, by which the bearers are distinguished from one another.

All charges of Arms are either proper or common; those charges are said to be proper which by a certain property do particularly belong to the Art of Heraldry, and are of ordinary use therein: hence they are styled "Ordinaries:" the common charges are the representations of all the emblems which retain their own names in the blazon. The principal Ordinaries are—the Chief, the Pale, the Bend, the Fess, the Cross, the Saltire, and the Chevron. The Sub-Ordinaries are—the Border, the Orle, the Inescutcheon, the Quarter, the Canton, the Pall or Pall, the Gyron, the Pile, the Flaunch, &c.

Differences, or Marks of Cadency, are the distinctions used to indicate the various branches or cadets of one family. The eldest son (during the lifetime of his father) bears a Label; the second, a Crescent; the third, a Mullet; the fourth, a Marelet; the fifth, an Annulet; the sixth, a Fleur-de-lis; the seventh, a Rose; the eighth, a Cross-Moline; the ninth, a double Quatrefoil.

The mode of using these marks of cadency, as practised by the Heralds' College, London, and Ulster's Office, Dublin, is to carry them down to the third generation. There is no rule as to the colours of cadency marks except one, the label of three points must not be argent except for the Royal Family; but the same heraldic rule applies to these marks as to ordinary heraldic charges, colour cannot lie on colour, or metal on metal.

If a younger son, say a third son, who bears a mullet for difference, assume by Royal Licence an additional surname, in addition to and after his own surname, and the arms belonging to that assumed surname, which would consequently be borne in the first quarter of his escutcheon, it is not necessary for him to continue the mark of cadency, as the compound coat is sufficient to distinguish him from the head of the family; if, however, he wish to use the mark of cadency, it should be borne in the fess point of the compound coat.

ATTITUDES OR POSITIONS OF ANIMALS, BIRDS, AND FISHES.

When a lion or other beast of prey stands upright, with only one ear and one eye seen, with the head in profile, he is termed rampant; when walking forward, with one eye and ear seen, passant; when sitting, sejant; when lying down, couchant. If in any one of these positions the animal look full face, so that both eyes and ears may be seen, the word guardant is annexed to passant, rampant, sejant, or couchant, as the case may be; and if he look back, the word regardant. An animal is suffant when leaping forwards bendways and having both the hind legs in the same position.

To griffins the term sceautant is given, in place of rampant. Animals of the deer kind have their positions otherwise blazoned. Thus, when looking full-faced, they are said to be at gaze; when standing, statant; when walking, tripping; when leaping forward, springing; when running, courant; and when at rest on the ground, lodged.

A horse when running is blazoned courant, or in full speed; when leaping, salient, cabré, or effray; when rearing, forcevé, but these three last terms are very seldom met with.

Birds are blazoned, when standing with their wings down, close; when preparing to fly, rising; when flying, volant; when rearing, volante; or when seen, displayed. The wings open and against each other are called indorsed. Two wings conjoined and expanded are calle a vol. One wing is a demival.

Fishes, when placed horizontally, are naiant; when perpendicularly, hauriant; when drawn in an arched form like a dolphin, they are embowed.

Any heraldic figure placed on or apparently emanating from an ordinary or other charge is called issuant. The term jessant is applied either to a general issuing of one charge from another, as "a chevron jessant-de-lis," or to the common device of a leopard’s or lion’s head "jessant-de-lis." A fish or amphibious creature is described as naissant from an ordinary when any portion of the body with the tail is seen. A serpent placed horizontally is said to be gliding.

CRESTS, TORCES OR WREATHS, AND BADGES.

The Crest yields in honour to none of the heraldic insignia. It was the emblem that served, when the banner was rent asunder, and the shield broken, as a rallying point for the knight’s followers, and a distinguishing mark of his own prowess. The Crest, named by the French Cimier, from Cime, the top or apex, and by the Italians Cimiero, originated in the necessity of distinguishing one chief from another, and making him known in the battle-field and the tournament; consequently, no crest is ever allowed to a female. As early as the year 1101, a seal of Philip, Count of Flanders, represents him with his crest; but at that period, and for a century and a half after, few of lesser degree than sovereigns and commanders in the wars ventured to carry this mark of distinction. The first example of a crest upon the helmet among English sovereigns occurs in the second great seal of Richard Cœur de Lion. The helmet has several vertical openings in front, and upon the top is placed a golden lion guardant. The seal, too, of Roger de Quincy, Earl of Winchester, one of the holy warriors of the reign of Henry III., exhibits on a cylindrical casque a dragon as a device. After the institution, however, of the Garter, the knights of that illustrious order adopted crests, and the practice soon became so general, that these emblems were assumed indiscriminately, by all those who considered themselves legally entitled to a coat armour.*

At their first adoption, crests were usually assumed from some charge in the shield; and thus, in very many ancient houses, we find the crest a mere emanation of the arms. Little information remains to us of the crests borne by the early nobility; and the little we do possess we owe to monumental effigies and illuminated manuscripts. Froissart, in particular, affords many curious examples. Nisbet and some other writers contend that these heraldic ornaments might be changed according to the good pleasure of the bearer, but this has long been forbidden by the Kings of Arms. If crests be the distinguishing tokens by which families may be known (and

* The monument of Sir Oliver de Ingham, in Ingham church, Norfolk, who lived temp. Edward III., “affords,” says Meyrick, “one of the earliest specimens of the jouusting helmet of his times, surmounted by its crest; and the sepulchral effigy of Sir John Harsick is a remarkable example of English armour towards the close of the reign of the second Richard. The knight is represented with his helmet on, over his coat of chained mail, so as to display the mode of wearing the crest and the mantle.”
HERALDRY.

This seems most assuredly to be the intention of the device, one might as well alter a coat of arms as an hereditary crest. Still, however, circumstances may arise in which a change becomes desirable; but this should never be made on slight or unimportant grounds. In early times, Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marshal of England, was, by the special concession of Richard II., allowed to carry the crest of England—"the lion passant guardant or;" and John Howard, in a subsequent reign, having married the daughter and heiress of Mowbray, substituted for the old crest of Howard, viz., "two wings, each charged with the family arms," the new but honourable cognizance of the golden lion.

No one is entitled to more than one crest unless he bears two surnames, or has received the additional device by a specific grant. The Germans, indeed, have long been accustomed to display in a row over their shields of arms the crests of all the houses whose ensigns they quarter; but their heraldry is peculiar, differing from that of the other countries of Europe. In truth, the impropriety of the practice of carrying more than one crest is remarkably striking, if we consider for a moment the purpose for which these cognizances were first designed.

Originally crests were carved in light wood, or made of boiled leather passed into a mould, in the form of some animal real or fictitious, and were fastened to the helmet by the torque or wreath, which was formed of two pieces of silk, "twisted together by the lady who chose the bearer for her knight." The tinctures of the wreath are always those of the principal metal and colour of the arms; and it is a rule in delineating the wreath (shown edgewise above the shield) that the first coil shall be of the metal, and the last of the colour of which the achievement is constituted. Such are the wreaths in general use. In depicting arms the wreath consists of six twists; when the crest is placed on a cap of maintenance, or on, or issuing out of a ducal or other crown, the wreath is not borne. The colours and metals of Liveries are governed by the tinctures of the wreath, or in its absence by the principal metal and colour of the arms; thus, if the principal metal of the arms be argent, the buttons and lace of the livery is silver; if or, they are girt. The cloth is blue, red, black, or green, according to the prevailing colour in the arms; if the colour be red, the colour of the livery may be modified to claret colour; if the field of the arms be a metal, and the charge an animal of its proper colour, and no other colour depicted in the arms, the colour of the livery should follow as near as possible the proper colour of the charge. The most usual colour used in such cases is brown.

Crests have sometimes, but very improperly, been confounded with "badges," altogether distinct devices, intended to distinguish the retainers of certain great noblemen, and wrought or sewn upon the liveries with which they were supplied by their lord. The badge appeared also emblazoned on the chief's standard or pennon, and was much esteemed until the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when the last brilliant relics of the feudal system—the joust, the tournament, and all their accompanying paraphernalia—fell into disuse. Henry II. bore an escarbuncle; and also introduced the famous badge borne so constantly by his successors, of the broom sprig or Planta Genista ("il portait ung Gennett entre deux Plantes de Geneste"); and his son, Richard I., on assuming the title of King of Jerusalem, hoisted the banner of the Holy City—the dormant lion of Judah—the badge of David and Solomon. Edward I. had a rose, stalk green and petals gold. Edward II. commemorated his Castilian descent by the badge of a gold tower. Edward III. bore "silver clouds with rays descending." Richard II. adopted the white hart,† the device of his mother, the Fair Maid of Kent, and used besides a White Falcon; and his successor, Henry IV.,

† "Among the few friends who attended Richard II. after his capture by the Earl of Northumberland, was Jenico d'Artois, a Gascon, that still wore the cognizance or device of his master, King Richard, that is to say, a white hart, and would put it away from him neither by persuasion nor threats; by reason whereof, when the Duke of Lancaster understood it, he caused him to be committed to prison, within the Castle of Chester. This man was the last (as saith mine author) which wore that device, which showed well thereby his constant heart towards his master."—Holinshead.
introduced the red rose of Lancaster, which became ever after the badge of the Lancastrians, as opposed to the white rose of York. He also had for cognizance the antelope, as well as the silver swan of the De Bohuns. When he entered the lists against Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, his caparisons were embroidered with the antelope and swan. Henry of Agincourt carried a beacon and fleur-de-lis crowned. "The white rose, en soleil," denotes the fourth Edward, and "the white boar," the third Richard. Henry VI. had for badge a Panther, and also two ostrich feathers in saltire, one silver, the other gold. His Queen, Margaret of Anjou, adopted a "daisy," in allusion to her name:

"The daisy a flource white and rede,
In French called la belle Margarète."

Henry VII. carried "the red dragon" of Wales, and also the portcullis as well as the red and white roses combined, emblematic of the union of the rival houses. "In the marriage procession of Henry Tudor and Elizabeth of York," says an agreeable writer, "each partisan of Lancaster gave his hand to a lady of the York party, holding a bouquet of two roses, red and white entwined; and at the birth of Prince Henry, the armorists composed a rose of two colours (the leaves alternating red and white), as an emblematical offspring of the marriage. Horticulturists, too, forced nature into an act of loyalty, and produced a party-coloured flower known to the present day as the rose of York and Lancaster."

The same cognizances were used by Henry VIII. and Edward VI., the former of whom displayed sometimes a greyhound courant and collared; and at others, after the siege of Boulogne, a white swan, the arms of that city. Queen Mary, before her accession, adopted the red and white roses, but added a pomegranate, to show her descent from Spain; but, on assuming the sceptre, she took "Winged Time drawing Truth out of a pit," with "Veritas temporis filia" for motto. The badges of Queen Elizabeth were the red and white roses, the fleur-de-lis, and the Irish harp, all ensigned by the royal crown, to which James I. added the Scottish thistle. Many of the greater nobility followed the royal example; Beauchamp had "the bear and ragged staff;" FitzAlan, "the white horse of Arundel;" Vere, "the blue boar;" Percy, "the crescent and manacle;" Stafford and Bourchier, "the knot."

THE MOTTO.

The Motto is, according to Guillim, "a word, saying, or sentence which gentlemen carry in a scroll under the arms, and sometimes over the crest." It had its origin, most probably, in the "cri de guerre," or the watchword of the camp, and its use can be traced to a remote period. Camden assigns the reign of Henry III. as the date of the oldest motto he ever met with, that of William de Ferrers, Earl of Derby, who encircled his shield with the legend, "Lege, lege;" and the same antiquary mentions the old seal of Sir Thomas Cavall, who bore for his arms a horse, and for his motto, "Thome credite, cum cernitis ejus equum." Other authorities, however, refer to several cases, that of Trafford of Trafford in particular, and carry up the mottoes to a much earlier epoch. Be this as it may, their general usage may be accurately dated, if not from an earlier period, certainly from the institution of the Order of the Garter; and after that celebrated event they became very general, and daily gained in public favour. During the wars of Henry V., Henry VI., and Henry VIII., innumerable mottoes graced the shields of the warriors of the time, and in the courtly days of Queen Elizabeth devices were especially fashionable.

Mottoes may be taken, changed, or relinquished, when and as often as the bearer thinks fit, and may be exactly the same as those of other persons. Still, however, the pride of ancestry will induce most men to retain, unaltered, the time-honoured sentiment which, adopted in the first instance as the memorial of some noble action, some memorable war-cry, or a record of some ancient family descent, has been handed down from sire to son through a long series of generations.
"Montjoye St. Denis" was the cri de guerre of the French kings, "St. Andrew" of the Scottish monarchs, and "St. George for merry England," of the English. "Dieu ayde au premier Chrétien" rallied the Montmorencys; and "A Douglas! a Douglas!" was not infrequently heard on the English borders, in answer to the Percy "Espérance."

The same conceit, as in Heraldic Bearings, of accommodating the motto to the name, has prevailed occasionally either in Norman-French or Latin: thus we have "Mon Dien est ma roche," for Roche, Lord Fermoy; "Let Curzon holde what Curzon holde," for Curzon; "Strike Dakyns, the devil's in the hempe," for Dakyns; "Cavendo tutus," for Cavendish; "Forte scutum salus ducum," for Fortescue; "Set on," for Seton, Earl of Winton; "Ne vile velis," for Neville; "Vero nihil verius," for Vere; and "Ver non semper viret," for Vernon.

How admirably suited is "Pro magnâ chartâ" to the Premier Barony, Le Despencer; and how plaintive is the expressive motto adopted by the once regal Courtenays of Powderham, after the loss of the Earldom of Devon, "Ubi lapsus! quid feci?" The "Fuitus" of the Earl of Elgin tells that the Bruces were once Kings; and the "Crom a boo" of the Geraldines recalls the time when an Act of Parliament made it treason to repeat that famous war-cry.

Mottoes are also frequently allusive to the arms and crests, and very often commemorative of some deed of chivalry. With reference to "the Hedgehog," the crest of the Kylikes of Herefordshire, the family of "the Man of Ross," is the inscription "Nil moror ictus" (I do not care for blows); the Gores, whose ensigns comprise the cross croslet, have "In hoc signo vinces." "Caen, Cressie, Calais," the motto of the Radelyses, commemorates the services of Sir John Radelyffe, Knt., of Ordsall, at the seiges of Caen and Calais, and at the battle of Cressy; and "Boulogne et Cadiz," borne by the Heygate family, records the presence of their ancestor at those famous seiges.

"Grip fast," the device of the Leslies, has remained unchanged since the time of Margaret, Queen of Scotland, by whom it was given to Bartholomew Leslie, the founder of the family, under the following circumstances:—In crossing a river, swollen by floods, the Queen was thrown from her horse, and in danger of being drowned, when the knight, plunging into the stream, seized hold of the royal girdle, and as he brought her with difficulty towards the bank, she frequently exclaimed, "Grip fast," words which she desired her preserver to retain for his motto, in remembrance of this circumstance.

The traditional origin of "Lamh dearg Erin" (the Red Hand of Ireland), the motto of the O’Neills, is this:—In an ancient expedition of some adventurers to Ireland, their leader declared that whoever first touched the shore should possess the territory which he reached. The ancestor of the O’Neills, Princes of Ulster, bent upon obtaining the reward, and seeing another boat likely to land, cut his hand off and threw it upon the coast.

Many mottoes are allusive either to a portion of the heraldic bearings, or to the family surname. "Leoni non sagittis fido," I trust to the lion not to the arrows, is that of the Egertons, whose shield exhibits a lion between three pheons; and the Martins use these singular words: "He who looks at Martin’s ape, Martin’s ape shall look at him!" having reference to their crest, of "an ape observing himself in a looking-glass." The Aitons of Kippo, a branch of Aiton, of that Ilk, adopted for motto, "Et decerpit dabant odorem," an elegant allusion to their crest of "a rose bough ppr," and of their being an offshoot of the parent stem.

The generality of mottoes, however, are expressive of sentiments of piety, hope, or determination.

Many of the most ancient houses in Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, adopted for their motto the slogan or war-cry of their sept, which was sometimes derived from the name of the chieftain’s feudal castle; thus Colquhoun of Luss bears "Cnockclachan;" Fitz-Gerald of Leinstor, "Crom a boo;" and Hughes of Gwereglas, "Kymer-yu-

Mottoes not infrequently indicate the antiquity and derivation of the families by whom they are borne. In “Loyw as thow fynds,” we recognise the Saxon origin of the Tempests of Tong, and in “Tout’s jours prest,” the Norman ancestry of the Talbots of Bashall: but this rule is far from being general: many families of Norman origin used English mottoes at a very early period, as Darell of Calehill, “Trow to you.”

CROWNS, CORONETS, CHAPEAUX, HELMETS, AND MANTLES.

Crowns were not originally marks of sovereignty, but were bestowed on those who gained a prize at the Olympic games, and at first were only bands or fillets, but subsequently they assumed various forms according to the peculiar feat of valour the person to whom they were granted performed.

The Crown, a distinctive badge of royalty, was anciently made open, but is now closed at the top with four arches and is usually called the Imperial Crown. That used at the coronation of the Sovereigns of England is made in imitation of the Crown supposed to have been worn by Edward the Confessor. The present imperial Crown has the rim adorned with four crosses pattée, and as many fleurs-de-lis alternately. From each cross rises an arched diadem closed at the top under a mound supporting a cross. The cap within the Crown is of purple velvet (heraldically represented crimson), and turned up with ermine. See p. xlix.

The Coronet of the Prince of Wales is, according to a warrant of Charles II, dated 19 February, 1660, composed of a circle or fillet of gold, adorned with four crosses pattée, and as many fleurs-de-lis alternately; from the two centre crosses rises an arched diadem, closed at the top under a mound supporting a cross, one arch only from the centre cross appearing in the representation. The cap is of crimson velvet, lined with white sarsnet, and turned up with ermine. The Prince of Wales also bears as a badge a plume of three ostrich feathers, encircled by a coronet adorned with crosses and fleurs-de-lis; the motto peculiar to this badge being “Ich dien.”

The Coronet of the Princes of the Blood Royal is similar to that of the Prince of Wales, without the arched diadem. The cap is of crimson velvet, bordered with ermine, with a tassel of gold.

The Princesses bear a similar Coronet, but instead of the four crosses and as many fleurs-de-lis, it is adorned with three strawberry leaves alternately, with a similar number of fleurs-de-lis and crosses.

The Arms and Coronets of the Members of the Royal Family are always assigned by the Sovereign to them individually.

The Coronet of a Duke is composed of a circlet of gold, chased as jewelled, having raised on it eight golden strawberry leaves, five of which are seen in representation. The cap is of crimson velvet, turned up ermine, thereon a golden tassel. It is sometimes used as a charge in armorial bearings, when it is called a Ducal Coronet, and is represented with only three strawberry leaves, and without the cap, tassel, or ermine.

The Coronet of a Marquess is a circlet of gold, chased as jewelled, charged with four strawberry leaves and as many large pearls alternately; when represented, only two pearls and three leaves appear. The cap is similar to that of a Duke.

An Earl’s Coronet is a circlet of gold, chased as jewelled, upon which rise eight pyramidal points gold, each of which supports a large silver ball, the spaces between the points being filled up at the bottom with strawberry leaves of gold, not rising as high as the balls. Only five of the balls appear when heraldically displayed. The cap is the same as the Duke's and Marquess's.

A Viscount's Coronet is a circlet of gold, chased as jewelled, supporting sixteen silver balls, seven of which appear in the representation.

The Coronet of a Baron is a plain circlet of gold, thereon six silver balls, four of which are seen in the representation.

The two last-named Coronets have the crimson velvet cap with the tassel, and the edging of ermine, the same as those of a Duke, Marquess, and Earl. See p. xxxiv.

The Coronet of a King of Arms is silver gilt, formed of a circle, upon which is inscribed part of the first verse of the 51st Psalm, viz., "Miserere mi Deus secundum magnam misericordiam tuam;" the rim is surmounted with sixteen leaves, in shape resembling the oak leaf, every alternate one being somewhat higher than the rest, nine of which appear in the profile view of it; the cap is of crimson satin, closed at the top by a gold tassel, and turned up with ermine. See p. xxxiv.

A crest-coronet or ducal coronet, on which, or issuing from which crests are often borne, is composed of a circlet of gold chased and jewelled, having raised on it four strawberry leaves, three of which appear in representation.

As the Crown of the Sovereign of England is not exactly similar to those borne by other potentates, so most of the Coronets of foreign noblemen are different from those of British peers.

Archbishops and Bishops bear the arms of their Sees impaled with their own family arms, without crest or motto, and with a mitre over the shield. The mitre of both Archbishops and Bishops is (with the exception of the mitre of the Bishop of Durham) exactly the same. It is a high golden cap, enriched with jewels, pointed and divided at the top, with fringed pendants hanging from the lower part; each top is surmounted by a cross, the present usual form of which is that of a cross-pattée. The mitre of the Bishop of Durham differs from that of the other Prelates in being encircled with a ducal coronet.

The Helmet, helme, casque, or, morion, varied in shape in different ages and countries. See p. xxxiii.

The Mantle, Guillim informs us, was named from the French word "Manteau," and served as a protection (being spread over and pendent from the helmet) "to repel the extremity of wet, cold, and heat, and withal to preserve the accoutrements from rust." Guillim thus continues: "Mantles, like other habits, have not escaped transformation, but have passed through the forge of fanatical conceit, in so much as (beside the bare name) there remaineth neither shape nor shadow of a mantle. But as they are used in achievements, whether you call them mantles or flourishings, they are evermore said in blazon to be doubled, that is, lined throughout with some one of the furs."

The mantle is sometimes termed a Lambrequin or Lamequin. The numerous strips and cuts into which it is usually divided, are supposed to indicate that it has been thus torn and hacked in the field of battle, and betokened a certain evidence of prowess.

The Chapeau (cap of maintenance or dignity) is of crimson velvet, lined with ermine, turned up into points at the back. It was formerly a badge of high dignity, and is now borne under the crest of several eminent families, instead of the wreath.

SUPPORTERS.

Supporters date from the fourteenth century. Menestrier and other authorities ascribe their origin to a practice at the tournaments, and the ground on which they base their opinions seems tenable enough. In those chivalrous pastimes no one was suffered to participate but he who was of noble descent or warlike renown, and each champion, to prove his title to those qualifications, exhibited his armorial shield upon the barriers and pavilions within the lists. Pages and esquires attended to watch their masters' escutcheons, and to report the name and quality of any knight who thought proper to challenge to the encounter. The chroniclers further relate, that on these occasions the armour bearers, who were thus employed, assumed the most grotesque, fantastic costume, enveloping themselves in the skins of lions or bears, and that hence arose the custom of using supporters. Of these masquerade characters, several curious specimens may be found in the illuminated manuscripts of Froissart, in the British Museum.

The appropriation of supporters, as legitimate parts of armorial bearings, does not appear to have been recognised in England earlier than the reign of Edward III. An heraldic document, compiled by Cooke, Clarencieux, in 1572, indicates the various changes the royal supporters underwent: Edward III. adopted dexter, a lion rampant; and sinister, a raven, both crowned; Richard II. a lion and a stag; Henry IV. an antelope and a swan; Henry V. a lion and an antelope; Henry VI. an antelope and a leopard; Edward IV. a bull and a lion; Richard III. a lion and a boar; Henry VII. a dragon and a greyhound; Henry VIII. the same; Edward VI. a lion and a dragon; Mary I., an eagle and a dragon; and Queen Elizabeth the same as her brother Edward. King James I., on ascending the English throne, introduced the unicorn of Scotland, and from that monarch's reign to our own times the lion and the unicorn have remained the royal supporters.

The position of these external ornaments of the shield is, in genuine and ancient Heraldry, always erect; and surely nothing can be more at variance with true blazonry than the absurd attempt of some modern artists to display them in picturesque attitudes. Thus the characteristics of a rude and contemporary era are violently destroyed, and the vestiges of the graphic art confused or annihilated.

In England the right to bear supporters is confined to Peers of the Realm, Knights of the Garter, the Thistle, and St. Patrick; Knights Grand Cross of the Bath (G.C.B.); Knights Grand Cross of St. Michael and St. George (G.C. St. M. St. G.); and to those Baronets and others (of which the number is extremely limited) who may have obtained them by special grant. The practice of the Sovereigns of England granting Supporters to the Peers of each degree, seems to have commenced in the reign of Henry VIII., as did that of granting the like ornaments to the Knights of the Garter and Bath. Further, in addition to these, Supporters are assumed and borne, but without any legal right, by the heirs apparent of dukes, marquesses, and earls, and by all the children of peers, to whom courtesy allows the prefix of "Lord." In ancient times, too, many eminent though unentitled families used these appurtenances to their shields. Edmondson says, "It may be justly concluded that those who used such additions to their shields, or on their shields, banners, or monuments, or had them carved in stone or wood, or depicted on the glass windows of their mansion, and in the churches, chapels, and religious houses of their foundation, as perspicuous evidences and memorials of their having a possessory right to them, are fully and absolutely well entitled to bear them, and that no one of their descendants ever ought to alienate such supporters, or bear their arms without them." Among the distinguished houses that use supporters under these circumstances, we may mention those of Fulford of Great Fulford, Devon, Tremain of Cornwall, Savage of Cheshire, Stawell and Lattrell of Somersetshire, Hilton of Hilton, and Tichborne of Tichborne. In Ireland, the heads of the different septs assert their claim to them, but no registry of supporters to an Irish chieftain appears in Ulster's Office, in right of his chieftaincy only, and without the honour of peerage, nor does any authority to bear them exist. In Scotland, the right to supporters belongs to the representatives of minor barons who had full baronial rights prior to 1587, and to the heads of a limited number of important families, including the chiefs of the more considerable clans. Lyon may also confer supporters e gratia, a prerogative which, generally speaking, has been very
HERALDRY.

Sparingly exercised. Nova Scotia baronets have, as such, no right to supporters, though many of them bear them in respect of the baronial qualification.

BANNERS AND STANDARDS.

The Banner is coeval with the introduction of Heraldry, and dates consequently from the twelfth century. It was of nearly a square form, exhibiting the owner's arms, and it served as the rallying point of the several divisions of which the army was composed. To judge from the siege of Carlaverock, it would seem that early in the fourteenth century there was a banner to every twenty-five or thirty men-at-arms, and that thus the battle array was marshalled. At that period the English forces comprised the tenants in capite of the Crown, with their followers; and it appears that such tenants were entitled to lead their contingent under a banner of their arms; but the precise number of men so furnished, which conferred this privilege, has not been ascertained. When the tenant in capite was unable to attend in person, from illness or other cause, he nevertheless sent his quota of soldiers or archers which the tenure of his lands enjoined, and his banner was committed to the charge of a deputy of equal rank to his own. Thus, at Carlaverock, the Bishop of Durham sent one hundred and sixty of his men-at-arms, with his banner entrusted to John de Hastings; and 'the good Edmund, Lord d'Eyncourt,' who could not attend himself, sent 'ses deux bons fils en son lieu mist,' (his two brave sons in his stead), and with them his banner of 'blue, billetée of gold with a dancetté over all.'

The right to bear a banner was confined to bannerets and persons of higher rank. In 1361, Edward III. granted to Sir Guy de Bryan two hundred marks a year for having discreetly borne the king's banner at the siege of Calais in 1347; and Thomas Strickland, the esquire who so gallantly sustained the banner of Henry V. at Agincourt, urged the service as worthy of remuneration from Henry VI. In France, so long as the chivalry of the old régime endured, and the observances derived from St. Louis, Francis I., and Louis XIV. were respected, the custody of the Oriflamme was hereditary; and still in Scotland the representative of the great house of Semygeour enjoys the honour of being banner-bearer to the sovereign. Ireland claims a higher antiquity in the use of banners and standards than any other European nation—penetrating even beyond the Christian era. The office of standard-bearer was hereditary in families, as, for instance, the O'Hanlons were hereditary standard-bearers to the O'Neill; and the Mac Affreys to the MacGuires. 'Three lions rampant' were borne on the banner of O'Brien, and 'the red hand' was emblazoned on that of O'Neill. The different septa or clans rushed to battle with their banners borne aloft, and uttering war-cries. That of O'Brien, _lamh laider a-bu!_ 'The strong hand for ever!' but after the Anglo-Norman period these war-cries became Anglicised, as, for instance, 'O'Neill a-bu!' 'O'Donnell a-bu!' i.e., 'O'Neill for ever!' 'O'Donnell for ever.' The great Anglo-Norman families followed the example, by adopting similar war-cries. The Fitz-Geralds had 'Crom a-bu!' the Butlers of Ormonde, 'Butler a-bu!' and the Burkes or De Burgos had 'Clanrickard a-bu!' and 'MacWilliam a-bu!'

The Standard was long and narrow, and split at the end. In the upper part of the English standard appeared the Cross of St. George, the remainder being charged with the motto, crest, or badge, but never with the arms. It is difficult to determine the qualifications which constituted a right to a standard, but there is reason to believe that no person under the rank of a knight could use one.

The length of the standards varied according to the rank of the bearer; the King's was from eight to nine yards in length; that of a Duke seven yards; of a Marquess, six yards and a half; of an Earl, six yards; of a Viscount, six yards and Heraldry.

How many are there who look on these heraldic decorations as mere general emblems of mortality, indicating nothing more than that a death has lately occurred. Yet we can, on making ourselves acquainted with the simple rules by which the arrangement of several achievements is regulated, at once know what rank the deceased held when living. If the hatchment be that of a lady, whether she was unmarried, a wife, or widow; if that of a gentleman, whether he was a bachelor, a married man, or a widower.

To show how easily this information can be acquired, I will briefly state the several distinctions.

On the morning of interment, a hatchment is placed on the front of the house belonging to the deceased, and another over the vault or tomb after burial.

The funeral escutcheon of a bachelor, represents his paternal arms single, or quartered with those to which he may be entitled, and accompanied with the helmet, crest, and motto. The ground of the hatchment (the vacant canvas of each side of the shield) is black.

For a maiden, her paternal arms are placed in a lozenge, single or quartered as those of a bachelor, with no other ornament than a gold cord loosely knotted at the top of the lozenge. The ground outside the shield is, like the former hatchment, black.

When a husband dies, leaving his wife surviving, the ground on the dexter side of the hatchment (that is, the side of the escutcheon opposite the left hand of the person looking at it) is black; and that on the sinister side (opposite the right hand of the spectator) is white. The arms in this case are impaled, that is, divided by a perpendicular line down the centre of the shield; those of the husband at the dexter side being black, to indicate his death. The crest is placed over the shield, and beneath it the family motto.

When a wife dies, leaving her husband surviving, the ground of the hatchment is black on the side opposite to the right hand of the person looking at it; at the opposite side white. Their arms are displayed as in the preceding case, but without crest or motto, and the shield appears suspended by a ribbon in a bow, and ornamented with a cherub's head and wings.

The hatchments of ladies (except peeresses, who are entitled to a robe of estate) are always without mantle, helmet, crest, or family motto, although funeral words and sentences are sometimes introduced.

A widower's hatchment represents his arms with those of his wife in the same manner as when living; that is impaled, or divided by a perpendicular line down the centre of the shield. His crest and motto are also emblazoned, and all the ground outside the escutcheon is black.

The hatchment of a widow represents her arms impaled with those of her husband, and enclosed in a lozenge, having a bow of ribbon at the top, and ornamented with a cherub's head and wings; all the ground outside the shield being black.

For a man leaving a second wife, the hatchment represents his arms (not impaled) on a black ground. On the dexter side, or that opposite the left hand of the spectator, is placed, apart from the shield of the husband, a small funeral escutcheon, on which his arms, with those of his first wife, are impaled; all the ground at this side of the hatchment being black, to indicate her decease. On the opposite side of the hatchment, that is, facing the right hand of the person looking at it, another small escutcheon is similarly placed apart from the husband's shield, and on it are displayed his arms impaled with those of his second wife; the ground at the extreme sinister side of the shield being white, to show that she survives him.

If a widower or a bachelor be the last of his family, a skull or death's head (heraldically termed a mort) is annexed to the escutcheon—the arms, crest, and motto being displayed in the manner already described; and the hatchment of a maid or widow, who is the last of her house, represents the arms in a lozenge, with a mort annexed.

The hatchments of Peers and Peeresses have their distinguishing coronets.

On the hatchments of Baronets a front-faced, open helmet is placed over the shield, on some part of which is displayed the red hand.

The armorial bearings of Knights are surrounded with the insignia of their respective orders, and surmounted with the front-faced open helmet, which is also assigned to knights bachelors.

The hatchments of Archbishops and Bishops represent their arms impaled with those of their See; the latter being placed on the dexter side, that is, opposite the left hand of the person who looks at it, consequently the opposite side is painted black, that under the arms of the see being white.

The hatchment of the wife of an Archbishop or Bishop represents two shields; that to the left of the spectator displays the arms of the See impaling the paternal coat, and surmounted by the mitre. The sinister shield (that to the spectator's right) is suspended by a knot, bearing the prelate's family arms impaled with those of his wife: the surface of the hatchment underneath the sinister shield being black, to denote the lady's death.

The same rule is observed with respect to the hatchments of the wives of Knights of the different orders, while those of Peeresses who have married commoners display the arms of their dignity at the sinister side (that is, the side opposite the spectator's right), apart from the heraldic bearings of their husbands.

SEIZE QUARTIERS.

If title be with us the test of position and precedence, the Seize Quartiers have been considered in Continental Europe as the test of blood, or what is strictly signified by the term "birth." It is the reverse of what is generally understood by "a family tree," for there, the stream commencing with the earliest known ancestor, flows down to the living generation; but in the "seize quartiers," beginning with the latter, the stream, dividing on the mother's and father's sides into two lines, thence continues to ascend, ramifying into the several sources whence it derives the vital current. Thus at a glance is displayed and analysed the heraldic componency of the warm flood circulating beneath each blazoned breast, betraying any alloying admixture that may exist, and may, as in the pedigree of a race-horse (if I may venture to use the simile), disentitle it to the character of "thorough-bred."

Increasing by a regular succession of reduplications in every generation, the range of that of the great-great-grandfather displays a series of sixteen shields of arms, the "seize quartiers;" the generation beyond has thirty-two shields, that succeeding it, sixty-four, and so on till in the thirtieth generation the series of names for that generation alone would exceed the present estimated population of the whole globe; and when the number, diminishing by one-half in each descending step, is added to the above, the total of individuals whose blood is transmitted into the living man is something prodigious; consequently the number ascending to the beginning of the world would be utterly uncountable. In this latter case it must be observed that the same individual must have figured several times in different positions of relationship, for otherwise in the generation contemporaneous with the creation of man, the broad array of progenitors would be totally incompatible with the solitary Adam and Eve, the fountain sources of all human blood.

The ancient chivalry of St. John of Jerusalem, which bore successively the titles of Knights of Rhodes and Knights of Malta, was variously exacting in its requirements of proof of noble birth from candidates seeking admission to its ranks. Vertot, the historian of the Order, tells us that the languages of Provence, Auvergne, and France were obliged to prove eight quarters, or coats of arms, that is the generation of great-grandfathers and great-grandmothers; Italy, only four quarters or shields, i.e., the grandfathers and grandmothers; but it was required that these four quarters should belong to families of a noblesse acknowledged for the preceding two hundred years. Four quarters was the number also required from the language of Aragon and Castile, including Portugal, but for German knights sixteen quarters were necessary, that being the number demanded by the Teutonic Order from its postulants. This is and was at all times considered a very rigorous ordeal, requiring often most laborious searches among archives and sources difficult of access, as well as condemning numbers to exclusion, for it is not alone in our days that ruined gentle blood sought to establish itself by union with merely plebeian gold: title availed nothing.

The mode of proceeding in drawing up a pedigree of "Seize Quartiers," is as follows, and the progression is very simple, though not generally understood: the very words being familiarly comprehended neither as to their verbal import, the rarity of the possession of such a pedigree, even among some of the most proudly titled families in the peerage, its intrinsic genealogical value abroad amid heraldic nations, or its being the real and actual test of the nobility of the blood of any individual.

First write down the name of the postulant, then above his name those of his father and mother, which form thus two quarters: the father's father and mother then follow, and the mother's father and mother fill up the line of generation, i.e., the grandfathers and grandmothers. Proceeding in the same way, we next mark down the father and mother of each grandfather and grandmother, which form the line of great-grandfathers and great-grandmothers, eight individuals, quarters or coats of arms; and the succeeding line of fathers and mothers of each great-grandfather and great-grandmother, constitute the series of the great-great-grandfathers and great-great-grandmothers, or sixteen quarters. This ramification, however, is best understood by a glance at the following diagram:

Eight paternal quarterings. Eight maternal quarterings.

who combines in his person the blood of the sixteen families, arrayed in the uppermost line, and displays sixteen coats of arms in his shield, as a postulant in chivalry.
I have thus endeavoured to explain the exact meaning of “Seize Quartiers.” By the universal consent of continental Europe, the sixteen quarters have been considered the test of blood; they have at all times been the Seaman which has opened the door of every presence-chamber of royalty, of every high place at foreign courts, and of every rich and noble Chapter. Nevertheless, according to our English notions, this test is rather, I think, one of curiosity than real value; for, compare the continental nobility, which very generally still possesses it, with the British nobility, which very rarely does, and mark the difference between them. Our own aristocracy yields to none other in high breeding, honour, noble daring, brilliancy of ancestry, talent, and simple, unostentatious grandeur of character, and yet, comparatively speaking, few even among that elevated class can trace their descent up to sixteen families on both sides entitled to armorial bearings; or, at least, in cases where this is practicable, many of the progenitors are of a very secondary station, and belong to a gentry wholly without illustration. The proof of value is its result; and considering that the aristocracy of Britain may justly claim superiority over the more exclusively well-born aristocracy of the rest of Europe, I cannot bring myself to believe that the test of “the Seize Quartiers” enters, necessarily, into the composition of a first-rate English nobleman or gentleman. That which is truly ennobling is a long line of gentle ancestors, either from father to son, or through heiresses bringing the right of representation, combined with honourable and appropriate alliances. Who would venture to dispute the nobility of birth of the ducal representative of the Douglases and the Hamiltons, on the ground that an alliance with a Gunning or a Beckford might perchance interfere with the perfection of the German test of “the Seize Quartiers?”

KINGS OF ARMS AND HERALDS.

The office of “King of Arms” is of feudal origin, and was one of the attributes of the pomp and splendour annexed to feudal sovereignty. There is no trace of such an institution anterior to the Norman invasion, which overturned the pre-existing system in England, formed as it had been by a fusion of the usages of the ancient Britons, Saxons, and Danes. Having so overturned it, the Normans introduced the military and chivalrous code of feuds, with its homage, and fealty, and services. Sir Henry Spelman is of opinion that the title of King of Arms was attributed to such heraldic officers in England as belonged immediately to the person of the King’s majesty, while those who appertained to princes of the blood royal, or to the nobility, were styled simply Heralds. Another learned author states that the title of “King of Heralds (of later times called King of Arms) was given to that personage who was the chief or principal officer presiding over the heralds of any kingdom, or of any particular province usually termed the marches, or of any order of knighthood.”

The primary duty of the English Kings of Arms and Heralds, at the time of their establishment, corresponded with that of the Heralds of foreign princes; they carried and delivered all messages of importance to allies, enemies, and rebels, gave solemn defiances and denunciations of war; summoned cities, castles, &c., to surrender; made propositions of peace, truce, and accommodation, and offered mercy and pardon to rebellious subjects and insurgents. They had also the cognizance, inspection, marshalling, and regulation of coats of armour, and the several marks of distinction connected with them; they received all foreign nobility and others coming to England to perform feats of arms, and gave safe conduct to them from their arrival to the time of their leaving the kingdom; assisted at tilts, tournaments, and feats of arms, and attended to the honour and reputation of military persons, and to the safety, welfare, and defence of the King and his realms. They had also the arrangement, order, and progress of legal combats; were likewise employed in marshalling and conducting coronations, marriages, baptisms, funerals, interviews, and other august assemblies, processions, pomp, and solemnities of the ancient monarchs, and took care that the orders, rites, and ceremonies established for those ceremonials were duly observed; and that the rules of precedence were strictly adhered to.

The pride and ambition of the nobility prompted them to imitate, and oftentimes to vie with, their Monarchs in state and magnificence. Hence it is that we find the Heralds attending at the funeral rites and ceremonies of the nobility, as well as at the celebration of their marriages, christenings, and other festivities, and practising the same forms and grandeur as were observed at those of the royal family.

Noble and illustrious descent having also been held in high esteem, strict attention was paid to the observance of a just and exact distinction between the different ranks or classes of the people. The ignoble never presumed, in those ancient times, to arrogate a participation in the rights annexed to eminence of parentage, or to claim honours to which their superiors alone were entitled. And the nobility and gentry, cautiously jealous of their dignity, avoided mixing with the vulgar, and were sedulously careful for the preservation, on all public and solemn occasions, of that purity of rank and precedence which was due by the feudal system to their birth and station in life. Family arms being the general criterion which distinguished the gentleman from the peasant, no persons were suffered to enter the lists to tourney, or exercise any feats of arms, unless they could, to the satisfaction of the Kings of Arms, prove themselves to be gentlemen of "Coat Armour." And the ancient gentry took particular care to have their arms embroidered on their common-wearing over-coats, and would not suffer any person of the lower class, although become rich, to use such tokens of gentle birth and distinction; nay, so jealous were they of any infringement of the armorial rights to which they were entitled, that whenever the arms which they and their families had borne happened to be claimed by any other gentlemen, they vindicated their rights in the military courts, and very often by duel.

Under those circumstances it became essential and was a necessary part of the duties of Heralds, to draw out, with accuracy and exactness, the authentic genealogies of noble families, and families of "gentle birth" to continue, and from time to time, to add to and preserve their pedigrees in direct and collateral lines; and to have a perfect knowledge of all hereditary arms, ensigns, badges of honour, and the external marks as well of personal as of family rank and distinction.

Some portion of the ancient duties of the Herald has become obsolete with the decay of the feudal system, but enough remains to render the office important and useful. That branch of his labours connected with genealogy is valuable in the highest degree. Genealogical tables and authentic pedigrees, regularly deduced, contain memorials of past transactions and events, and from them chronologers and historians have drawn very considerable assistance; they have operated to the detection of frauds, forgeries, and impostures; cleared up doubts and difficulties; established marriages; supported and defended legitimacy and purity of blood; ascertained family alliances; proved and maintained affinity and consanguinity; vindicated and corroborated the titles of lands to their possessors; and have been of essential use in settling claims and rights of inheritance without litigation, by furnishing effectual evidence. Such has been, and ever must be, the utility of genealogies, when they are framed with integrity and authenticated by evidence.

The HERALDIC AUTHORITY over England and Wales is delegated by the Crown to the hereditary Earl Marshal (the Duke of Norfolk), and three Kings of Arms, Garter, Clarenceux, and Norroy, who form, together with the Heralds and Pursuivants, the College of Arms. Of these, the principal is "Garter King of Arms." In his Patent he is styled Principal King of English Arms, and Principal Officer of Arms of the most noble Order of the Garter. To him immediately belongs, inter alia, the adjustment of arms in England and Wales, and likewise the power of granting arms under the authority of the Earl Marshal, in conjunction with the provincial Kings of Arms according to their several jurisdictions, to persons qualified to bear them. "Clarenceux King of Arms," so named from the Dukedom of Clarence, has jurisdiction over the south-east and west parts of England; and "Norroy King of Arms," the most ancient of the heraldic sovereigns in England possesses as his province, England north of the Trent. He is the North King—"Norroy." The English Heraldos bear the designation of "Windsor," "Chester," "Somerset," "Lancaster," "York," and "Richmond," the Pursuivants are known by the names of "Rouge Dragon," "Rouge Croix," "Bluemantle," and "Portcullis."

The date of the creation of the historic and dignified office of Garter King of Arms may be fixed with certainty to have been between May and September, 1417. The first Garter was William Bruges, originally styled "Guyenne King of Arms," and subsequently "Garteir Roy d'Armes des Anglois." By the constitution of King Henry VIII., it was provided that Garter should be Sovereign within the College of Arms above all the other officers, that he should have the correction of Arms, Crests, Cognizances, and Devices, as well as the power and authority to grant Armourial Bearings; and that he should "walk in all places next to Our Sword, and no one between them except the Constable and Marshal when they carry the batons of their office."

In addition, Garter King of Arms has various other duties of considerable importance to perform, such as the regulation of precedence, the guidance of Coronations, and State Ceremonials, the control and management of all matters concerning the Order of the Garter, &c.

The Badge of Garter is of gold, having on both sides the Arms of St. George, impaled with those of the Sovereign, within the Garter and Motto, enamelled in their proper colours, and ensigned with the royal crown. His sceptre is of silver girt, about two feet in length, the top being of gold, of four sides of equal height but of unequal breadth. On the two larger sides are the Arms of St. George impaling the Sovereign's, and on the two lesser sides, the Arms of St. George, surrounded by the Garter and Motto, the whole ensigned with an imperial crown.

The ancient office of Lyon King of Arms, long styled Lord Lyon King of Arms, the King of Arms of Scotland, is found occupying a very prominent position so far back as 1371, the year of the coronation of Robert II., at Holyrood. He derives his authority directly from the Sovereign, and is entitled to wear an oval badge suspended by a broad green ribbon. The Badge consists on the obverse of the effigy of St. Andrew bearing his cross before him, with a thistle beneath, all enamelled in the proper colours on an azure ground. The reverse contains the arms of Scotland having in the lower parts of the Badge, a thistle, as on the other side; the whole surmounted with an Imperial Crown. Lyon is the chief Heraldic Officer of the Order of the Thistle, and enjoys the same rights and privileges in Scotland as Garter King of Arms does in England. The insignia of the Lyon Office are, "Argent, a lion sejant full-faced gules, holding in the dexter paw a thistle slipped vert, and in the sinister an escutcheon of the second, on a chief azure a St. Andrew's cross of the first."

In Ireland, Ulster King of Arms has the sole heraldic jurisdiction, and has under him Athlone Pursuivant: he is, ex-officio, Knight Attendant on the most illustrious Order of St. Patrick.

The title of "Ulster King of Arms," was created in the reign of Edward VI. But the office itself, under the designation of "Ireland King of Arms," had its origin in more remote times, the first express mention of Ireland King of Arms being in the sixth year of King Richard II., 1482; Froissart, vol. ii., calls him "Chauvins le Roy d'Irelande." A regular succession of officers by the title of "Ireland King of Arms," continued from that time to the reign of King Edward IV., who promoted Thomas Ashwell to that office.

This title of "Ireland," as Sir Henry Spelman and Sir James Ware say, was afterwards, by Edward VI., altered into that of Ulster. That King himself, in his journal, takes notice of it as follows—"Feb. There was a King of Arms made for Ireland, whose name was Ulster, and his province was all Ireland." The patent passed under the great seal of England, 1553, with an ample preamble, in testimony of the necessity and dignity of the office, which was given to Bartholomew Butler, York Herald. And a warrant bearing equal date with the patent was issued to Sir Ralph Sadleir, Knt., of the King's Wardrobe, to deliver him "one coat of blue and crimson velvet embroidered with the gold and silver upon the same with the King's Arms."

The Badge of "Ulster" is of gold, containing on one side the cross of St. Patrick, or as it is described in the statutes, "The cross gules of the Order upon a field argent, impaled with the Arms of the Realm of Ireland," and both encircled with the Motto, "Quis Separabit," and the date of the institution of the Order, MDCCCLXXXIII. The reverse exhibits the Arms of the Office of Ulster, viz., "Or, a cross gules, on a chief of the last a lion of England between a harp and portcullis, all of the first," placed on a ground of green enamel, surrounded by a gold border with shamrocks, surmounted by an Imperial Crown, and suspended by a sky blue ribband from the neck.

The general precedence of Ulster King of Arms was affirmed by his Majesty King William IV. by royal warrant, dated at St. James's, 17th day of May, 1835, which was issued for revising and making alterations in the statutes of the Order of St. Patrick. After reciting that, by the Act of Union, Ireland became part and parcel of the United Kingdom, and "our King of Arms of all Ireland has not had, since that event, any specific place or precedence assigned to him among our Kings of Arms by special ordinance or royal authority; We do hereby direct and command that in all ceremonials and assemblies Ulster King of Arms shall have place immediately after the Lord Lyon, King of Arms of Scotland." Hence, the general precedence of the Kings of Arms for Great Britain and Ireland stands arranged thus: 1st. Garter King of Arms of England; 2nd. Lyon King of Arms of Scotland; 3rd. Ulster King of Arms of all Ireland; 4th. Clarenceux King of Arms; and 5th. Norroy King of Arms.

The local precedence of Ulster King of Arms at the Irish Court was established at the institution of the office in Ireland, and the place assigned him the head of the officers of state, and next the person of the Viceroy. This order of precedence was afterwards confirmed by successive Lords Lieutenants and Lords Justices. In an ordinance of the Earls of Orrery and Muontrath, Lords Justices, dated at Dublin Castle, 18th April, 1661, the programme of precedence of the officers of state at the Irish Court was set forth in detail, and stated therein to have been "what had formerly been used" by the "lords deputies or lords justices," and the place of the King of Arms was therein set forth as first in order, and next to the lords justices as representatives of the sovereign.

The Duke of Bolton, by an ordinance dated at Dublin Castle, 17th day of August, 1717, confirmed that order of precedence, and assigned the place of Ulster King of Arms to be next to the person of his Grace; and after Ulster, the other official personages of the Court.

By another order, of Lord Carteret, dated from "his Majesty's Castle of Dublin the 29th day of October, 1724," the same roll of precedence was affirmed and ordered. The last order upon the subject of the precedence of the person holding the office, was the royal warrant of his Majesty King William IV., already mentioned.

Very considerable powers and duties, in addition to the due control and registration of arms and pedigrees, were from time to time conferred and imposed upon the Ulster King of Arms, in matters of official proceedings and courtly duties, which he regulates, whence the archives of his office present not only an interesting record of the various ceremonials observed from time to time at the Irish Court, but are also landmarks of genealogy, and consist not merely of genealogical materials and references, but in great measure of genealogies of families, full, ample, and complete.

The Shield, or Escutcheon,

Is the principal object whereon the emblems or charges of Heraldry are depicted. It varies much in shape, but is depicted triangular, or, as it is technically called, "Heater-shaped," on the oldest monuments, coins, and seals. The surface or space within the bounding lines of the shield is called the Field.

The Shield is divided into the following parts, A B C, the chief, subdivided into A', the dexter or right hand chief point; B, the middle chief point; C, the sinister, or left hand chief point; D, the collar, or honour point; E, the heart, or fess point; F, the nombril, or navel point; and G H I, the base, subdivided into G, the dexter base point; H, the middle base point; and I, the sinister base point.

The Shield is distinguished by certain heraldic colours called Tinctures, separated by division lines, and charged with a variety of animals, real or fabulous, instruments, and other objects, which themselves bear the designation of charges.

The Tinctures used in Heraldry are metals, colours, and furs.

To Sylvester Petra-Sancta, a celebrated Italian Herald, is assigned the invention of the lines and points by which the tinctures are expressed.

The Metals are—

The Furs are—

| Ermine  | A white field with black spots.                                        |
| Ermines | A black field with white spots.                                        |
| Erminois| A gold field with black spots.                                         |
| Pean    | A black field with gold spots.                                         |
| Vair    | Composed originally of pieces of fur, but now silver and blue, cut to resemble the flower of the campanula, and opposed to each other in rows; when of different tinctures, they are specified and described vairé. |
| Counter Vair | Differs from “vair” by having the bells or cups arranged base against base, and point against point. |
The earliest representation of the indication of colour by engraved lines, in England, is on the impression of a seal to the death warrant of Charles I.

The old Heralds used more minute distinctions: the Arms of gentlemen, esquires, knights, and baronets, they blazoned by tinctures; those of the nobility by precious stones; and those of emperors, kings, and other sovereign princes, by planets.

The term Counterchanged (French, de l’un en l’autre) expresses that the field is of two tinctures, metal and colour, and that the charge upon it partakes of both,—the charge, or part of the charge, being of metal, which lies upon the colour; and the charge, or part of the charge, being of colour, which lies upon the metal. “Transmutation, or counterchanging, says Guillim, “is an intermixture of the several tinctures of the shield and charge, occasioned by the apposition of some one or more lines of partition over the whole.”

It is an inviolable rule of Heraldry, that metal shall never be placed upon metal, nor colour upon colour; that is if the field be of colour, the immediate charge must be of metal, and vice versa, but numerous exceptions to this rule are found. Not only in coats of a date anterior to the systematic or scientific arrangement of Armorial Bearings, but in many of foreign origin.

PARTITION LINES.

Partition Lines are those that divide the field or charge; and are always Right or Straight Lines, unless when otherwise described; those that vary from the Right Line are called—

- Engrailed.
- Invented.
- Wary.
- Embattled, or Crenellée.
- Nebulée.
- Indented.
- Dancettée.
- Raguly.
- Dove-tailed.

To these may be added, those of never occurrence, Champagne or Urké, which resembles an embattled line with the battlements and indentures drawn to a point instead of being cut straight, and Potence, when the edge of the line resembles the heads of crutches.

Party* per Pale. The field, or charge, divided into two equal parts by a perpendicular line.

* This word, in the blazon of Arms, is generally omitted; per pale, per fess, &c. implying the division of the shield.
GLOSSARY.

Quarterly; the field, or charge, divided into four equal parts by two lines, one perpendicular, the other horizontal.

Party per Fess; the field, or charge, divided into two equal parts by a horizontal line.

Party per Bend; the field, or charge, divided into two equal parts, by a diagonal line from the dexter chief to the sinister base.

Party per Bend sinister; the field, or charge, divided into two equal parts by a diagonal line from the sinister chief to the dexter base.

Party per Chevron; the field, or charge, divided into two equal parts by two lines meeting pyramidically in the fess point, drawn from the dexter and sinister base.

Party per Saltire; the field, or charge, divided into four equal parts, by two diagonal lines crossing each other.

Gyrmony of Eight; the field divided into eight equal parts by four lines, two per saltire, and two quarterly.

ORDINARIES.

All charges of Arms are either proper or common; those charges are said to be proper which by a certain property do particularly belong to the art of Heraldry, and are of ordinary use therein; hence they are styled ordinaries; the common charges are the representations of all emblems which retain their own names in the blazon. The term here employed "proper" must not be confused with the similar one (see Dictionary of Terms) which indicates that any heraldic charge in a shield, crest, or supporter, is of its natural colour or nature.

The principal Ordinaries are—

The Chief (called by French Heralds, un Chef, signifying head, from the place it occupies in the shield) is the whole upper part of the field, cut off horizontally by a straight or any other of the partition lines used in Heraldry, and should comprise a third part* of the escutcheon.

The Pale is formed by two lines drawn perpendicularly from the top to the base of the escutcheon, comprising a third part of the field. "The French," observes Mackenzie, "say that soldiers of old carried pales of wood to encamp them, which they fixed in the earth," and thus originated this heraldic bearing.

The Bend (Balteus) is formed by two lines drawn diagonally from the dexter chief to the sinister base, and comprises the third part of the shield. It represents a shoulder-belt, or scarf.

* The Chief and the other ordinaries which are mentioned as occupying a third part of the escutcheon, should, strictly comprise that space; but in armorial drawings this rule is seldom adhered to.
Glossary.

The Bend sinister is the same as the Bend, excepting that the lines are drawn from the sinister chief to the dexter base.

The Fess is formed by two horizontal lines drawn across the field, comprising the centre third part of the escutcheon. It is emblematic of the military girdle worn round the body over the armour.

The Bar is a diminutive of the fess, and of the same form, containing one-fifth of the field, and may be placed in any part of the escutcheon.

The Cross is composed of four lines, two parallel lines perpendicular, and two transverse, not drawn throughout, but meeting by couples at right angles, near about the fess point.

The Saltire (the Cross of St. Andrew) is formed by four lines, two drawn from the dexter chief towards the sinister base, and the others from the sinister chief towards the dexter base, meeting in the middle by couples in acute angles, and resembling two bends, dexter and sinister, uniting or blending where they cross.

When charges are borne upon ordinaries, they are described "on a fess," "on a chevron," "on a bend," &c., as the case may be. When charges are placed in the position that ordinaries occupy, they are blazoned as "in pale," or "in fess," or "in bend," &c., as the case may be.

The Chevron (supposed by some writers to have been adopted from the bow of a war saddle, which rose high in front) is formed by two parallel lines drawn from the dexter base, meeting pyramidalically, about the fess point, two other parallel lines drawn from the sinister base.

Sub-Ordinaries.

The Border (French, Bordure) was formerly a mark of difference, to distinguish one branch of a family from another. It surrounds the field, occupying one-fifth of it, and is of an equal breadth at every part.

The Orle, is an inner border that does not touch the extremities of the shield, the field being seen within and round it on both sides. It has the appearance of an escutcheon voided, or, as it were, insulated. The Tressure is a diminutive of the Orle.

The Inescutcheon, is a small escutcheon, borne within the shield.

The Quarter, is the space formed by two lines, the one drawn horizontally from the side of the shield to the centre, and the other perpendicularly from the chief to meet it in the same place, and occupies one-fourth part of the shield, as the term implies.

The Canton, derived from cantonnée, cornered, is less than the Quarter, comprising only the third part of the chief, and is formed, as the Quarter, by a perpendicular line drawn from the top of the shield, meeting another drawn horizontally from the side. The Canton always occupies the dexter chief of the escutcheon, unless otherwise expressed.

Chequy, or Chequy, is used when the field, or any armorial charge, is divided by transverse lines perpendicularly and horizontally into equal parts or squares alternately of different tinctures, like a chess-board. On ordinaries, chequy must consist of at least three ranges of square pieces.
Quarterly: the field, or charge, divided into four equal parts by two lines, one perpendicular, the other horizontal.

Party per Fess: the field, or charge, divided into two equal parts by a horizontal line.

Party per Bend: the field, or charge, divided into two equal parts, by a diagonal line from the dexter chief to the sinister base.

Party per Bend Sinister: the field, or charge, divided into two equal parts by a diagonal line from the sinister chief to the dexter base.

Party per Chevron: the field, or charge, divided into two equal parts by two lines meeting pyramidically in the fess point, drawn from the dexter and sinister base.

Party per Saltire: the field, or charge, divided into four equal parts, by two diagonal lines crossing each other.

Gyrscopy of Eight: the field divided into eight equal parts by four lines, two per saltire, and two quarterly.

GLOSSARY.

Billets. Billets are oblong figures. When they exceed ten, and are irregularly placed, their number is not expressed in the blazon; but the field or charge covered with them is said to be billetée.

The Paile, or Pall, is composed of the upper half of a saltire and half a pale, the latter issuing from the base point of the shield to the centre.

The Gyron, is of a triangular form, composed of two lines, one drawn diagonally from the dexter chief angle of the shield, and the other horizontally from the dexter side, both meeting in the centre.

The Pile (representing a pile used in the erection of military bridges), should contain, if borne plain, one-third of the chief in breadth, and when charged, two-thirds: it issues from the chief and tapers to a point, like a wedge, towards the base.

The Flaunch, or Flanque, is made on each side of the shield, by the segment of a circular superfices drawn from the corner of the chief to the base point.

The Lozenge, is a parallelogram with equal sides, forming two acute and two obtuse angles.

The Mascle, is a Lozenge perforated or voided, so that the field appears through the opening.

The Fusil (representing a kind of spindle used in spinning) resembles the lozenge in shape, but is somewhat longer. The field or charge when divided by diagonal lines dexter and sinister, so as to form fusils all over it, is denominated Fusily. There are two other well known, though not modernly adopted, forms of the fusil, and more characteristic of the spindle which they are intended to represent.

The Roundle, is of a circular form, like a piece of money, and assumes a different name according to its tincture:

For the origin or meaning of these charges, see them, respectively, in the Dictionary of Terms.

The Annulet, is a ring, the tincture of which must be expressed.

Lozengey, is when the field or any armorial charge is divided by diagonal lines transversely, into equal parts or lozenges, alternately of different tinctures.

The Fret, is composed of six pieces, viz., two long ones in saltire, extending, as a rule, but not necessarily, to the extremity of the field, and four pieces conjoined in the centre in the form of a mascle, interlaced or fretted by those in saltire.
The Goutte, is the representation of a drop of liquid, and assumes a different name according to its tincture. When yellow, it is called goutté, or goutté, d’or; when white, goutté d’eau; when red, goutté de sang; when blue, goutté de larmes; when green, goutté de vert; when black, goutté de poix. If a field, or charge, be covered with more drops than ten, it is termed goutté d’or, de larmes, de poix, as the case may be.

THE APPENDAGES OF THE SHIELD.

The Helmet, Mantling, Wreath, Crest, Supporters, and Motto.

The Helmet, Helm, Casque, or Morion, has varied in shape in different ages and countries. The most ancient form is the simplest, composed of iron, of a shape fitted to the head, and flat upon the top, with an aperture for the light. This is styled the Norman Helmet, and appears on very old seals, attached to the Gorget, a separate piece of armour which covered the neck. In the twelfth century, a change was made to mark the rank of the individual bearer.

- The Helmet assigned to Kings and Princes of the Blood Royal, is full-faced, composed of gold, with the beauvoir divided by six projecting bars, and lined with crimson.

- The Helmet of the Nobility is of steel, with five bars of gold: it is placed on the shield inclining to a profile.

- The Helmet of Knights and Baronets, is the full-faced steel helmet, with the visor thrown back, and without bars.

- The Helmet of Esquires, always depicted in profile, is of steel, with the visor closed.

Each of these Helmets is placed immediately above the escutcheon, and supports the wreath on which is the crest.

MARKS OF CADENCY.

Differences, or Marks of Cadency, are the distinctions used to indicate the various branches or Cadets of one family. The eldest son during the lifetime of his father bears a Label; the second, a Crescent; the third, a Mullet; the fourth, a Martlet; the fifth, an Annulet; the sixth, a Fleur-de-lis; the seventh, a Rose; the eighth, a Cross moline; the ninth, a Double quatrefoil.

DICTIONARY OF
TERMS USED IN HERALDRY.

Abased (abaisé) is applied to an ordinary borne below its usual position.
Abatements, marks of degradation of coat armour, of which heraldic writers enumerate nine.
Accolé (the same as gorged, which see).
Accosted, side by side.
Accroyed, grown to maturity.
Accorned, bearing acorns.
Addorsed, placed back to back.
Affrontée, full-faced.
Alant, winged.
Alant, or aland, a mastiff dog with short ears.
Allerion, an eagle without beak or feet.
Amethysé, a precious stone, formerly used to express purpure.
Ancreé, or anchored, applied to a cross, of which the four extremities resemble the flook of an anchor. See under Croises.
Annulet, a ring.
Antelope, the animal of that name.
The heraldic antelope is represented somewhat differently as shown on the annexed cut.
Appanné, the hand open, presenting the palm, and the fingers and thumb at full length.
Argent, silver or white.
Armed. All birds which have talons and bills that aid them to seize and rend their prey, are in blazon said to be armed when those weapons differ in tincture from their bodies. But to swans, wild geese, and other birds without talons, the word armed does not apply. They, in like case, are termed beaked and membered. Beasts are also described as armed, when their horns or hoofs are of another colour than their bodies.
Arraché, same as Erased.
Arrondie, made circular or round.
Arret, same as Siejant.
Achievement, a term used for a fully marshalled coat, but generally for a funeral hatchment.
Attired, is applied to the horns of animals of the deer species, instead of armed, as they are supposed to wear their antlers not as weapons, but ornaments.
Attires, the horns of a buck.
Azure, blue.
Bailloné, applied to a lion holding a staff in his mouth.
Balista, an engine to throw stones and darts, also called a Swepe.
Banded, encircled with a band or ribband.
Bar. See p. xxxi.
Barbéd, is derived from the French word "barbé." The five leaves which appear on the outside of a full-blown rose are, in Heraldry, called the barbs, and thus blazoned, a rose gu. barbed and seeded ppr.
Barmacles, instruments used by farriers to curb horses.
Baron and femme (per), impalement of the arms of husband and wife.
Barse-Gemel, two bars or barrulets placed parallel to each other, the the word Gemel being derived from "Gemelli," twins.
Barrulet, a diminutive of the bar.
Barry and barruly, describes the field or charge, divided by lines horizontal.
Basilisk. An heraldic monster, resembling in shape the wivern or cockatrice, but having, at the end of its tail, the head of a dragon.
Basnet (basonet), an old name for a helmet.
Baton, derived from the French word baston, staff or cudgel, and generally borne as a mark of Bastardy. It does not go from side to side of the shield as the bend does; but is couped in the form of a truncheon.
Battering-ram, an instrument used by the ancients to beat down the walls of a besieged city. See p. xxxiv.
Battled-imbattled, one battlement upon another.
Battled-bar and battley, describes a single charge divided, diagonally, into four, six, eight, or more equal parts.
Bend. See p. xxx.
Bendlet, a diminutive of the Bend, of which it is half the size in breadth.
Bendy, describes a field or charge divided, diagonally, into four, six, eight, or more equal parts.
Bendy bordure.
Beau, the current coin of Byzantium, or Constantinople—in English Heraldry, represented as round flat pieces of gold without impress.
Bezanté, semé of bezants.
DICTIONARY OF TERMS

Billets are oblong squares, by some supposed to represent bricks, by others letters. See p. xxxii.

Billeté, semé of billets.

Bird bolt, a small arrow with a blunt head.

Border, or bordure. See p. xxxi.

Botonny, applied to a cross, whose extremities resemble the trefol. See Crosses. Bouget. See Water bouget.

Bow, bowed, embowed or arched.

Braided, same as interlaced.

Brètresi, im battled, that has its battlements on each side, one against the other.

Brismey, a god-dy.

Brassets, and brassets, armour for the elbows and arms.

Burgonet, a sort of steel cap, formerly worn by foot soldiers in battle.

Cotised, or cotiséd (French, bande diminuee en cotisés ou cotise bande) is a diminutive of the bend, being one-fourth of its breadth, and one-half of the width of the bendlet. They are generally borne in couples with a bend or charge between them. When there are two, they are termed cotisses, but when borne on each side of the fess or bend, are usually blazoned a bend or fess cotised.

Cotton-hank, a skin of cotton yarn, in a bow or knot.

Couchant, applies to an animal lying down. See Lion couchant.

Counter, changed.

Counted, See p. xxix.

Couped, term used when the head or limb of an animal, or when any other charge is cut off by an even line.

Couple-close, a diminutive of the chevron, and often borne with it as the cotise is borne with the bend; it contains one fourth of the chevron, and is always borne in pairs, and should be blazoned "a chevron betw. two couple-closes."

Covert, running.

Covert, a term applied to a chief which has a piece of hanging falling over its upper part, so as not to hide, but only to be a covering to it.

Coward, an animal is termed coward when drawn with its tail between its legs.

Cramp, a piece of iron, turned up at each end, usually borne in pairs.

The Arms

OF THE DIFFERENT MONARCHS SINCE THE CONQUEST.

WILLIAM I. (THE CONQUEROR). Gu. two lions pass. guard, or. Much controversy has arisen regarding leopards or lions, but the latter would appear the more correct. John, the Monk of Hamonstier, in Tourain, a contemporary writer, relates, that when Henry I. selected Geoffrey Plantagenet to be his son-in-law, “Clypeus Leouculos aureos imaginarios habens collo ejus suspensilitur.”

WILLIAM II. (RUFUS), second son of the Conqueror. The same Arms as those of his father.

HENRY I., third son of the Conqueror. Arms similar to those of his predecessor.

KING STEPHEN. This Prince’s Arms are differently described: by some he is said to have borne the same Arms as his maternal grandfather, William the Conqueror; by others—Gu. the bodies of three lions pass. the necks with men’s bodies or, in form of the sign of Sagittarius; by a third, which is the most correct, Gu. a Sagittarius ar. King Stephen is said to have adopted the latter bearing from the great assistance afforded him by the archers, and having entered the kingdom when the sun was in the sign Sagittarius.
HENRY II. Gu. two lions pass. guard. or, previously to the King's marriage with Eleanor of Aquitaine, when he adopted a third lion, for Aquitaine. On the Great Seal no Arms appear, the concave side of the shielding only exhibited. HENRY II. appears to have been the first monarch who used a badge, he first bore an escarbutile of gold, an ancient mark of his paternal House of Anjou, and afterwards introduced the sprig of broom plant, or Planta Genista, from which his surname Plantagenet, was derived, and which was a favourite badge with some of his descendants. He is also said to have borne a jenget between two sprigs of broom.

RICHARD I. (Coeur-de-Lion). Before the Crusade, Richard's Great Seal shows but a moiety of the shield (the dexter side) with a lion rampant sinister, from which the inference is that he then bore two lions contumbat. After his exploits in the Holy Land, another Great Seal bears the three lions, which henceforward became the hereditary bearings of the Kings and Queens of England. This King bore as a badge a broom branch with the pods open, this device appears on his first Great Seal; he also used a crescent surmounted by a star. Having defeated the French at Gisors, 1198, and his watchword there being "Dien et mon droit," he adopted it for his motto, and it continued the motto of nearly all his successors.

King John. Prior to his elevation to the throne, when Earl of Mortagne, in Normandy, this Prince bore two lions only; after his accession he assumed the Arms of his predecessor. King John used as a badge the crescent surmounted by a star, one of the badges of his predecessor, Richard I.

HENRY III. bore the same Arms as his father King John, and used the Planta Genista, or broom ship, for his badge.

EDWARD I. bore the same Arms as his father, Henry III., and his grandfather, King John; his badge was, A rose slipped, the stalk vert, the petals or.

EDWARD II. bore the same as his three immediate predecessors; his badge was a golden tower, in allusion to the arms of his maternal grandfather, Ferdinand III., King of Castile.

EDWARD III. This Prince assumed the title of King of France, in supposed right of his mother, Isabel, daughter of Philip IV., who became that monarch's sole heiress, his three sons having died issueless. Quarterly, 1st and 4th, France, az. semé-de lis or; 2nd an 3rd, England, gu. three lions pass. guard. or. His favourite badge was "Sunbeams issuing from clouds." Henry VIII. caused this cognizance to be represented on the habits of Knights of the Garter, in memory of this sovereign, the founder of the Order. Edward III. also bore, A trunk or stump of a tree eradicatd and cupped or.

Crest—Upon a chapeau gu. turned up erm. a lion pass. guard. crowned or. Edward III. was the first English King who bore a crest, which was continued by succeeding monarchs to Edward VI. inclusive, on the Great Seal.

The Order of the Garter was instituted by King Edward, and the ribbon was generally borne round the Royal Arms by his successors, although not introduced on the Great Seal before the time of Henry VIII.

RICHARD II., son of the Black Prince. This monarch bore the same Arms upon the Great seal as Edward III., but having chosen St. Edward the Confessor for his patron, he impaled the Arms of the Confessor, Az. a cross patonce betw. five martlets or, with the Arms of France and England, quarterly.

Richard was the first English King who used Supporters, namely, two angels; beneath the shield, a white hart couchant, gorged with a gold collar, and chained under a tree; a device from the ensigns of his mother Joan, the Fair Maid of Kent, a white hind, which he bore as a badge. He likewise used other badges, viz., A peasepod branch, with the pods open and empty. The sun in splendour, and The eradicated stump of a tree cupped or; he also used A white falcon. At a tournament held at Windsor, previous to his departure for Ireland, forty knights and as many esquires were apperellled in green, with a white falcon for a badge. The "Sunbeams issuing from clouds," the "Planta Genista," and the "White hart," appear on the mantle and kirtle of his monumental effigy in Westminster Abbey. An ostrich ducally gorged and chained, holding a passion nail in the bill and a "knot" are on the effigy of his first Queen, Anne.

HENRY IV. This Prince appears to have taken the Great Seal of his predecessor, the second Richard, merely substituting his own name for that of the late King, and bearing the same Arms, with England occasionally in the first quarter.
Supporters—On the dexter side, a swan ar., gorged and lined or; on the sinister, an antelope ar. gorged and lined as the dexter.

Badge—A "silver swan" was the principal cognizance of this King, derived from the Bohuns, Earls of Hereford, his first wife being a daughter and co-heir of that House. Another of his badges, "a white antelope," is said to have also had a connection with that house. Another badge ascribed to him is a fox's tail, derived from his maternal ancestors, the house of Lancaster. In a MS. entitled "Arms of the Founders of the Order of the Garter," the badge of Henry Plantagenet, Duke of Lancaster, represents a square tablet divided into two by a perpendicular line down the centre, coloured white and blue, on the white appears a red rose, and on the blue a fox's brush in its proper colours. The double SS was another device of this King, the origin of which has not been accounted for. His second wife, Joane of Navarre, used for a cognizance, an ermine collared and chained, with the motto, "A temperance."

Henry V. Quarterly, France and England. The Arms of France having been altered by the French King, limiting the number of fleurs-de-lis to three, Henry V. adopted the alteration.

Supporters (when Prince of Wales)—Two swans, each holding in the beak an ostrich feather and scroll; after ascending the throne, he assumed a dexter supporter, a lion rampant guard. crowned, the sinister being an antelope, as that of his predecessor.

Badge—Before his accession to the throne he used the silver swan of Henry IV., and afterwards a fire beacon. Over his tomb in Westminster Abbey there is a representation of an antelope and a swan chained to a beacon.

Henry VI. Arms, same as predecessor.

Supporters—Two antelopes ar. gorged with coronets, attired and chained or; those appear over the porch of Eton College. A tiger rampant, guard. or, semé of roundles alternately sa. gu. az. and vert, with fire issuing from the mouth and ears, sometimes occurs as the sinister supporter.

Badge—A device of this King was a panther, another ascribed to him was two ostrich feathers in saltire, one silver, the other gold. The ostrich feather was a favourite badge of the descendants of Edward III., borne, sometimes one and sometimes three, the pen of the feathers was fixed in a scroll; the coronet as now borne by the Prince of Wales was added by Edward VI. The badge of Henry VI.'s Queen, Margaret of Anjou, was a daisy, with the motto, "Humble et loiall."

Edward IV. France and England, quarterly.

Supporters—Dexter, a lion rampant ar. the tail passed between the legs and turned over the back (one of the supporters of the King, as Earl of March; sinister, a bull sa., horned and hooped or; a white hart was likewise borne.

Badges—A falcon ar. within a fetterlock closed or, as Duke of York. A dragon sejant sa. crowned or, as Earl of Ulster. A bull sa. horned and hoofed or, for the Honour of Clare or Clarence. But his favourite device was the "rose en soléil," viz., a white rose surrounded with the rays of the sun.

He also used a white hart attired, gorged with a coronet, and chained or, on a mount vert. This badge Edward used in honour of Richard II., it being that King's badge.

Edward V. France and England, quarterly.

Supporters—Dexter, a lion ar. (one of the supporters of the Earldom of March); sinister, a hind ar.

Badges—The white rose of York, and the falcon within the fetterlock.

Richard III. France and England, quarterly.

Supporters—Two lions ar. tuks and bristles or. The white boar was his cognizance.

Badges—The boar, composed of silver, tusked and bristled gold, called by Shakspear, "The bloody and usurping boar." At his coronation thirteen thousand were provided, made and wrought upon fustian. The device of his Queen, Lady Anne Neville, was a white boar chained and muzzled gold, an ancient cognizance of the House of Warwick.

Henry VII. France and England, quarterly.

Supporters—Dexter, a dragon gu. (the ensign of Cadwallader, the last King of the Britons); sinister, a greyhound ar. collared gu.

Motto—Dieu et mon droit.
Badges—A red dragon, called the Dragon of Cadwallader, was the cognizance of this King at first; it is usually found in illuminations on a ground of white and green, the livery colours of the House of Tudor. A favourite device of this King was a portcullis gold, with the motto, "Altera securitas;" this was derived from the Beauforts. He also used the Tudor rose, composed from the roses of York and Lancaster, viz., a rose quarterly az. and gu., but it was sometimes formed in two series of petals, the inner white, the outer red.

HENRY VIII. France and England, quarterly.

Supporters—The supporters in the beginning of this King's reign were the same as those of Henry VII.; but he afterwards discontinued the greyhound, and used the following instead—On the dexter side a lion guard, and crowned or, transposing the red dragon to the sinister.

Motto—Dien et mon droit.

Badges—A red rose; the union roses, red and white; a fleur-de-lis or; a portcullis or.
He likewise used the red dragon, and a cock silver, combed and wattled red.

He was the first English monarch who encircled the Royal Arms with the Garter, surmounted by the crown, upon the Great Seal. His Queens bore the following badges:—

KATHERINE of ARRAGON. A pomegranate, also a sheaf of arrows silver.

ANNA Boleyn. A silver falcon.

JANE Seymour. A phoenix (since borne in the family crest by the Ducal House of Somerset).

Anne of Cleves. A black lion charged on the shoulder with an escarbuncle gold.

KATHERINE Parr. A maiden's head issuing from a Tudor rose.

No badge of KATHERINE Howard has been preserved.

EDWARD VI. Arms, Supporters, and Motto, the same as his father, Henry VIII.

Badges—Before his accession to the throne he bore the three ostrich feathers with the pens in a scroll; he encircled the feathers with a coronet, as now borne by the Princes of Wales. After his accession to the throne his device was the sun in splendour ppr.

MARY I. The Queen, after her marriage with Philip of Spain bore the King's Arms (viz., per fess, the chief part quarterly of four pieces: 1st, Castile and Leon, quarterly; 2nd Arragon, impaling Sicily; 3rd, as the 2nd; 4th, as the 1st. The base part of the escutcheon, also quarterly of four pieces: 1st, Austria modern; 2nd, Burgundy modern; 3rd, Burgundy ancient; and 4th, Brabant; over all an inescutcheon of Flanders and Tyrol impaled impaling France and England, quarterly.

Supporters—Dexter, an eagle; sinister, a lion ramp. crowned or.

Badges—Queen Mary before her accession used both the red and white rose, and a pomegranate, knit together, to show her descent from the House of Lancaster, York, and Spain; but on her accession, Winged Time drawing Truth out of a pit, with "Veritas temporis filia," for motto, appears on her first Great Seal before marriage.

She also bore a sheaf of arrows silver, united with the Tudor rose, the arrows being placed on a ground of green and blue.

The rose ensigned with the royal crown seem to have been another badge used by this Queen.

QUEEN ELIZABETH. France and England, quarterly, encircled by the Garter.

Supporters—Dexter, a lion ramp. guard, and crowned or; sinister, the red dragon, as borne by her father, Henry VIII.

Badges—This Queen's principal badge was a silver falcon, as her mother's, but she made use of several hereditary devices, but most commonly that of a sieve. The badge of Ireland, the Irish harp, seems for the first time in this Queen's reign to have been placed on the Great Seal.

JAMES I. Quarterly, 1st and 4th, France and England, quarterly; 2nd, or, a lion rampant within a double trezure flory counterflory gu., for Scotland; 3rd, az. a harp or, stringed ar., for Ireland.

Supporters—Dexter, the English lion ramp. guard. crowned or; sinister, the Scottish unicorn ar. gorged with the royal coronet and chained or.

Motto—"Beati pacifici," and, "Dien et mon droit."

Badges—The three badges of the roses, fleur-de-lis, and harp, and that of a thistle, for Scotland, all ensignied with the royal crown, were borne by James I., and on his Great Seal appear banners of the arms of Cadwallader, the last King of the Britons, viz., az. a cross patty fitche or; and the Arms of King Edgar.
THE ROYAL ARMORY.

Charles I. Arms, Crests, Supporters, and Badges, the same as those of his father, James I.

On the Great Seal is represented the standard of St. George, viz., a cross gu. supported by the lion of England, and the standard of St. Andrew, being, az. a saltire ar. upheld by the unicorn of Scotland.

Charles II. This Monarch bore the same Arms, &c. as Charles I., and by Royal warrant dated 9th Feb. in the 13th year of his reign, directed that in future the heir apparent to the crown, for the time being, should use and bear a coronet composed of crosses and fleurs-de-lis with one arch, and in the midst a bull and cross, as in the royal diadem; and that his brother, James, Duke of York, the sons of the Sovereign, and the immediate sons and brothers of his successors, Kings of England, should use coronets composed of crosses and fleurs-de-lis only; but that all their sons, respectively, having the title of Dukes, shall use coronets composed of crosses and flowers, or leaves, such as are used in the coronets of Dukes not being of the Blood Royal.

James II. This King used the same Arms, &c., as his brother, Charles II.

William III. and Mary II. Arms, &c. those of James I. with an escutcheon of pretence, thereon the Arms of Nassau, viz., az. billetty or, a lion rampant, gold.

(K.G.)

HABIT AND INSIGNIA.

The Garter of dark-blue velvet, edged with gold, bearing the motto in golden letters, with buckle and pendent of gold richly chased. The garter is worn on the left leg below the knee.

The Mantle of blue velvet, lined with white taffeta; on the left breast the star embroidered.

The Hood of crimson velvet.

The Surcoat likewise of crimson velvet lined with white taffeta.

The Hat of black velvet, lined with white taffeta; a plume of white ostrich feathers, in the centre of which a tuft of black heron's feathers, all fastened to the hat by a band of diamonds.

The Collar, gold, consisting of twenty-six pieces, each in form of a garter, enamelled, azure, and appended thereto.

The George, or figure of St. George on horseback, encountering the dragon. The George is worn to the collar; and the lesser George, pendent to a broad dark-blue ribbon over the left shoulder.

The star of eight points, silver, upon the centre of which the Cross of St. George, gules, encircled with the garter.

Motto—Honi soit qui mal y pense. Ribbon of the Order—Garter blue.
THE MOST ANCIENT AND MOST NOBLE ORDER OF THE THISTLE.

Revived by King James II. in 1687. Re-established by Queen Anne, 31st December, 1703.

(K.T.)

The Star of this Order, which is worn on the left side of the coat or cloak, consists of a St. Andrew's Cross, of silver embroidery, with rays emanating from between the points of the cross, in the centre of which is a thistle of green, heightened with gold; upon a field of gold, surrounded by a circle of green, bearing the motto of the Order in golden characters.

The Badge, or Jewel, worn pendent to the collar, or to a dark green ribbon over the left shoulder and tied under the arm. It consists of a figure of St. Andrew, of gold enameled, with his gown green and the surcoat purple, bearing before him the cross, enameled white, the whole surrounded by rays of gold in the form of a glory; the cross and feet resting upon the ground, of enameled green.

The Collar is of Thistles, intermingled with sprigs of rue.

Motto—Nemo me impune lacessit. Ribbon of the Order—Green.
THE MOST ILLUSTRIOUS ORDER OF ST. PATRICK.

(K.P.)

The Star.—The Star of the Order of Saint Patrick consists of the Cross of Saint Patrick, gules, on a field argent, charged with a trefoil as on the Badge, surrounded by a sky-blue enamelled circle, containing the motto and date, and is encircled by four greater and two lesser rays of silver.

The Collar.—"The Collar of Our Most Illustrious Order of Saint Patrick," say the statutes, "shall be of gold, and it shall be composed of Roses and Harps alternate, tied together with a knot of gold, and the said roses shall be enamelled alternately white leaves within red, and red leaves within white; and in the centre of the said Collar shall be an Imperial Crown, surmounting a Harp of Gold, from which shall hang

"The Badge of our said Order; and the said Badge shall be of gold, surmounted with a wreath of Shamrock or Trefoil, within which shall be a circle of Blue Enamel containing the Motto of Our said Order in Letters of Gold, viz.,—Quis Separabit, with the date MDCCCLXXIII. being the year in which Our said Order was founded, and encircling the Cross of St. Patrick, gules, surmounted with a trefoil vert, each of its leaves charged with an Imperial Crown or, upon a field argent."

Motto—Quis separatit. Ribbon—Sky-blue.
THE MOST HONOURABLE ORDER OF THE BATH.

Instituted in 1399. Revived in 1725. Enlarged in 1815 and 1847.

MILITARY KNIGHTS GRAND CROSS. (G.C.B.)

The badge for the Military Classes of the Order is a gold Maltese cross, of eight points, enamelled argent; in the four angles, a lion passant guardant or; in the centre, the rose, thistle, and shamrock, issuant from a sceptre between three imperial crowns or, within a circle gules; thereon the motto of the Order, surrounded by two branches of laurel proper, issuing from an escroll azure, inscribed Ich Dien (I serve), in letters of gold. It is worn by the grand crosses pendent from a red ribbon across the right shoulder, by the knights commanders from the neck, and by the companions from the button-hole.

The Collar is of gold (weight thirty ounces Troy weight), and is composed of nine imperial crowns, and eight roses, thistle, and shamrock, issuing from a sceptre, enamelled in their proper colours, tied or linked together with seventeen gold knots, enamelled white, having the badge of the Order pendent therefrom.

The Star of the Military Grand Crosses is formed of rays or flames of silver, thereon a gold Maltese cross, and in the centre, within the motto, branches of laurel, issuant as in the badge.

CIVIL KNIGHTS GRAND CROSS.

The Civil Knights Grand Crosses retain the old badge and star of the Order. The Star is of silver, formed with eight points or rays, charged with three imperial crowns, proper, upon a glory of silver rays, surrounded with a red circle, upon which is the motto of the Order. Their badge is of gold, composed of a rose, thistle, and shamrock, issuing from a sceptre between three imperial crowns, encircled by the motto. The civil knights commanders wear the same badge, of a smaller size, round the neck by a red ribbon, and the civil companions the same, but of a still smaller size, from the button-hole, pendent from a red ribbon.

Military Knights Commanders. (K.C.B.)

Civil Knights Commanders. (K.C.B.)

The Star of the Knights Commanders is in the form of a cross-pattée of silver, having the same centre as the Grand Crosses, but without a gold Maltese cross thereon. The star of the Civil Knights Commanders is of the same form and size, only omitting the laurel wreath round the circle containing the motto and the escroll with the words "Ich dien" underneath.

Ribbon of the Order—Red.
THE MOST EXALTED ORDER OF THE STAR OF INDIA.

Instituted by Her Majesty Queen Victoria, February 23rd, 1861, and enlarged, March 28th, 1866.

The Star.—Rays of gold issuing from a centre, having thereon a star in diamonds, resting upon a light blue enamelled circular ribbon, tied at the ends, inscribed with the motto of the Order, viz.:—"Heaven's light our guide," also in diamonds.

The Collar.—Composed of the lotus of India, of palm branches, tied together, in saltier, and of the united Red and White Rose. In the centre is an imperial crown; all richly enamelled on gold, in their proper colours.

The Badge.—An onyx cameo of Her Majesty's effigy, set in a perforated and ornamented oval, containing the motto of the Order, "Heaven's light our guide," surmounted by a star all in diamonds. The Ribbon of the Order is sky-blue, having a narrow white stripe towards either edge, and is worn from the right shoulder to the left side.

The Mantle.—Light blue satin, lined with white, and fastened with a cordon of white silk, with blue and silver tassels, on the left side a representation of the star of the Order.
KNIGHTS COMMANDERS.

The Knights Commanders wear around their necks a ribbon of the same colours and pattern as that of the First Class, but two inches in width, hanging therefrom the Badge of a smaller size than that appointed for the Knights Grand Commanders except the star, which surmounts it, is of silver; on their left breast a star composed of rays of silver issuing from a gold centre, having thereon a silver star resting upon a blue enamelled circular ribbon, tied at the ends, inscribed with the motto of the Order.

COMPANIONS.

The Companions wear from the left breast a Badge of the same form as appointed for the Knights Commanders, but of a smaller size pendent to the like ribbon of the breadth of one inch and a half.

Motto—Heaven's light our guide.

Ribbon of the Order—Sky-blue, with a narrow white stripe towards either edge.
THE MOST DISTINGUISHED ORDER OF ST. MICHAEL AND ST. GEORGE.

Instituted 27th April, 1818, by Letters Patent, under the Great Seal of Great Britain, and enlarged and extended 4th December, 1868, for the natural born subjects of the Crown of the United Kingdom as may have held or shall hold high and confidential offices within Her Majesty's colonial possessions, &c.

HABIT AND INSIGNIA.

The Star of a Knight Grand Cross is composed of seven rays of silver, having a small ray of gold between each of them, and over all the cross of St. George, gules. In the centre is a representation of the Archangel St. Michael encountering Satan, within a blue circle, inscribed with the motto, AUSPICIA MELIORIS AEVI.

The Collar is formed alternately of lions of England, of Maltese crosses, and of the ciphers S M and S G, having in the centre the imperial crown, over two winged lions, passant guardant, each holding a book and seven arrows. At the opposite end of the collar are two similar lions. The whole is of gold except the crosses, which are of white enamel, and it is linked together by small gold chains.

The Badge is a gold cross of fourteen points of white enamel, edged with gold, having in the centre, on one side, the Archangel St. Michael encountering Satan, and on the other St. George on horseback, encountering a dragon, with a blue circle, on which the motto of the Order is inscribed. The Cross is surmounted by the imperial crown, and is worn by the Knights Grand Cross to the Collar, or to a wide Saxon-blue ribbon, with a scarlet stripe from the right shoulder to the left side.
The Mantle is of Saxon-blue satin, lined with scarlet silk, tied with cordons of blue and scarlet silk and gold, and has on the left side the star of a Knight Grand Cross.

The Chapeau is of blue satin, lined with scarlet, and surmounted with white and black ostrich feathers.

Knights Commanders.

The Knights Commanders wear the badge suspended to a narrower ribbon from the neck, and have on their left side a star composed of four rays, with a small cross of eight points in saltire, of silver, surmounted by the cross of St. George, gules, and having the same centre as the Star of the Grand Crosses.

Companions.

The Cavalieri and Companions wear the small cross of the Order from a still narrower ribbon at the button-hole of their coats.

Motto—Auspiciun Melioris Ævi. Ribbon of the Order—Saxon-blue, with a scarlet stripe.
THE ORDER OF THE INDIAN EMPIRE.

Instituted by Her Majesty Queen Victoria, Empress of India, 1 January, 1878.

This Order was instituted to reward services rendered to Her Majesty and Her Indian Empire and to commemorate the Proclamation of Her Style and Title of Empress of India, and is to consist of the Sovereign, Grand Master, and Companions.

The Viceroy and Governor-General of India for the time being to be Grand Master of the Order.

The Companions are to consist of such persons who by their services, official or other, to the Empire of India, have merited the Royal Favour, and upon such distinguished Representatives of Eastern Potentates as the Sovereign may think fit.

The Councillors of Her Majesty for the Indian Empire are to be ex-officio and for life Companions of the Order.

The Companions of the Order to have place and precedence next to and immediately after the Companions of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, and to rank among themselves according to the date of their respective nominations.

The Badge consists of a Rose, enamelled gules, barbed vert, having in the centre Her Majesty's Royal Effigy, within a purple circle, inscribed "Victoria Imperatrix," with the word "India" on the leaves of the rose, surmounted by an Imperial Crown, all gold, pendent from an ornamented gold clasp by an Imperial purple ribbon, one inch and a half in width.

Crest—In front of a dragon's head erased gu. entwined by a serpent or, a fountain ppr. Motto—By worth. Description of the Arms—The crest (a red dragon) was that of the ancient family of De Keighley for many generations Lords of the Manor, whose last representative (a female called the maids of the house of Cavendish in the time of Queen Elizabeth, and thence borrowed the marriage of the Keighley and Cavendish arms. Of which Duke of Devonshire is the head. His Grace still retains the estate which has belonged to his family for nearly 700 years. The serpent twined round the head of the dragon is the Cavendish crest. The circle with the wavy lines at the bottom of the crest, and also repeated in the shield, is the heraldic emblem of water technically called a fountain, and refers to the situation of Keighley in a well watered valley, the streams of which have greatly tended towards the progress of the town, being of great value for manufacturing purposes. This idea is also borne out by the motto "By Worth," that being the name of the principal stream on the banks of which Keighley is situated. The motto also alludes to the combination of the Keighley and Cavendish arms. The silver shield and black bar being those of the former family, while the three stage's heads are the cogni- zance of the Cavendish. The blue embattled border surrounding the shield shows that the arms are those of an ancient town, which is the case, Keighley having obtained its original market charter in the reign of Edward I.
